Opera slaying arrest made

Times News Services

NEW YORK — A stage-hand at the Metropolitan Opera House was charged today in the slaying of Helen Hagnes Mintiks, a British Columbia-born violinist whose bizarre murder at the Met sparked fears of a real-life "phantom of the opera."

The suspect, Craig Steven Crimmins, 21, a high school dropout described by detectives as a "street kid," has held various jobs at the Met for the last four years. He was on a four-week vacation, due back at the Met Sept. 9, when arrested.

The suspect's father and stepfather are long-term Met employees and they co-operated in the investigation, detectives said.

Chief of Detectives James Sullivan told a news conference Crimmins was identified as a suspect about two weeks ago from among at least 1,000 people interviewed since the Juilliard-trained violinist was slain July 23.

Miss Hagnes — as she was known professionally — was a member of a freelance orchestra assembled for the tour of the Berlin Ballet.

After playing the final C in the Don Quixote pas de deux, she placed her violin on her seat and left the pit for a brief talk with Valery Panov, a Russian defector and premier dancer with the troupe, intending to return for the program's final work.

It was the last note she ever played.

Her nude, bound and gagged body was discovered the next morning in an airshaft in the huge, cavernous theatre. She had been hurled from a roof while still alive.

The medical examiner's report said there was evidence of sexual assault but not of rape. Police believe there was a sexual motive for the slaying.

Sullivan refused to discuss any evidence in the case. He did say Crimmins' appearance matched a police sketch circulated in the Met but not released to the public.

The suspect was described as being of medium build, with brown hair and blue eyes. He had recently had a tatoo bearing an eagle and an American flag affixed to his right arm with the date, Aug. 21, 1980.

"We do not know that he knew her," he said, adding he suspected the victim and Crimmins had had a chance encounter.

The suspect lived with his father, Edward, an electrician at the Met for more than 20 years, and his 19-year-old sister. His stepfather also has been employed by the Met for more than a decade, police said.

A native of Aldergrove, Miss Hagnes played with the CBC orchestra in 1971 before she won a scholarship to Western Washington State College and acceptance by the Julliard School of Music in New York.

She also represented Canada in the Jeunesses Musicales world orchestra in Montreal and Copenhagen.

Polish workers win

Warsaw yields on union issue

Times News Services

GDANSK — Poland's worst labor crisis in a decade appeared to be near an end today, after the Polish Communist party approved a settlement with striking workers that provides "independent, self-governing trade unions" and other political and economic reforms.

The party's central committee in Warsaw approved the agreements that strike leaders in Gdansk and the major port of Szczecin said would send workers back to their posts by Monday.

The Polish news agency PAP said the central committee met under the chairmanship of party leader Edward Gierek to review agreements worked out by Senior Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski with a strike committee in Gdansk and by Deputy Premier Kazimiersz Barcikowski with the strike committee in Szczecin.

Initial reports indicated not all of the Gdansk workers' 21 demands had been met but that the agreement guarantees the right to strike, provides immunity from prosecution for strike leaders, the release of political prisoners and relaxation of censorship laws except when military, economic or state secrets are involved.

A draft of the agreement said "the government will be obliged to prepare and present a complete program implementing all these demands, taking into consideration the economic possibilities of the country by Sept. 30."

The statement suggested the workers will return to work as a show of good faith and that the agreement represents a compromise recognizing Poland's severe economic problems.

As strike leader Andrezj Gwiazda read the communique announcing the tentative accord, hundreds of cheering workers gathered in the Lenin Shipyards threw their old union cards into the air.

After meeting with jubilant workers at the shipyards, flashpoint for the strike which began Aug. 14 and spread across the country, First Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski returned to Warsaw to submit the accord to the central committee.

Under terms of the settlement, both sides agreed that the independent trade union would be built on "Socialist principles."

Writ aims new blow at centre

Victoria's controversial convention centre issue is once again back in the courts.

A group called the Victoria Waterfront Enhancement Society filed a writ in Supreme Court Friday asking the court to quash a bylaw passed by city council in late July approving a development permit for the project on Wharf Street below Bastion Square.

The writ was served five minutes before city hall closed for the weekend, and Mayor Bill Tindall postponed comment until he had discussed the matter with city manager Jim Bramley.

Charles Ball, spokesman for the society said today the suit alleges three violations of the Municipal Act:

— That city hall failed to give proper notice to all residents and owners of property in the immediate area affected by the zoning change;

— That a written report on a public hearing on the centre read out in council prior to the vote on the development permit was incomplete, and

— That new material of relevance to the substance of the motion was introduced just prior to the vote, thereby depriving council members of adequate time to consider the material.

Mr. Justice W.J. Wallace's June 25 quashing of a rezoning bylaw that would have allowed the centre to be built on the waterfront site is under appeal.

17 rock concert fans die in tear gas panic

MASERU, Lesotho (UPI) — At least 17 teenagers, panicked by a barrage of police tear gas, were trampled and smothered to death in the southern African kingdom of Lesotho as they tried to force their way into a sold-out rock concert, police said today. Another 30 were injured in the melee.

"It was a horrifying experience," the show's promoter, Joseph Tsatsanyane, said. "Blood was flowing as youngsters tried to climb over each other in an attempt to escape the tear gas."

Hospital director Dr. N.C. Moji said 16 bodies were recovered at the hall after the stampede Friday night and another teenager died today. He said some of the injured were in serious condition.

The fans, between 12 and 18 years old, became angry when they were told the concert by local South African star Steven Kekane was sold out.

A crowd of 1,000 fans gathered outside the small 4,000 seat AMI concert hall in the Lesotho capital, and about midway through the show surged towards the locked doors.

Police fired tear gas canisters into the crowd, touching off a panicky stampede in all directions.

Witnesses said police may have started firing tear gas when the windows of the concert hall were smashed by rocks. Several shots rang out but police said they may have come from gun-toting fans and not police.

Radio Lesotho broadcast an urgent message for all doctors in the area to come to the Queen Elizabeth hospital to help treat the injured.

Large lines formed outside the government mortuary as relatives of the dead fans gathered to identify the bodies.

"It was just how I imagined the Who concert to be," one fan said.

On Dec. 3, 1979, 11 young people died in Cincinnati, Ohio, when fans rushed the doors of the Riverfront Coliseum to get to their seat for a performance by the British rock band The Who.

Labor beefs by mail

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C Federation of Labor is tired of being ignored by the provincial government and won't go to Victoria to present its annual brief to cabinet, federation president Jim Kinnaird said Friday.

Kinnaird said in a news release the best reception the labor organization has received from the cabinet to date has been rude indifference. He said this year's brief will be mailed to Victoria.

"Last year we were told privately by the premier following the presentation of the brief, that contrary to public statements he made, he had no intention of co-operating or communicating with the B.C. Federation of Labor," Kinnaird said.

Plight of crime 'habituals' probed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A group of B.C. criminology and law students is trying to find out why 17 of Canada's longest-serving prisoners are still behind bars.

The students will interview individuals who have been serving time for up to 24 years as habitual offenders — a designation struck from the Criminal Code in 1977 but under which they still are imprisoned.

The habituals — many of whom are eligible for old-age pensions — received what amounts to life sentences after being convicted of at least three indictable offences.

Don Sorochan, one of the lawyers co-ordinating the project, says more than half of all the criminals designated habitual offenders in Canada were sentenced in Vancouver during an anti-crime campaign in the 1960s.

Sorochan, appointed Tuesday as a regional member of the National Parole Board, said the typical habitual offender was not a violent public menace, but a petty lawbreaker who couldn't stay away from burglaries, street-level drug activities or similar offences.

"But once they got onto the habitual status, it became a never-ending treadmill, where they got let out on parole, only to be brought back in for what may or may not have been a criminal offence," he said.

"For instance, public drunkenness. An ordinary individual who is picked up is just as likely to be put in the drunk tank overnight to sleep it off before being released, whereas a habitual might have his parole revoked and find himself back in the penitentiary for a year at least.

"It seems quite unfair that some of these old-time habituals, who, relative to other prisoners, have no serious offences, end up staying so long in prison."

Habituals now serving time in B.C. average 56 years old and have been behind bars for an average of 16½ years. About 30 other habituals are free on parole or day pass.

Sorochan said he felt the problem was partly political, especially since the habituals could have been released when the habitual offender law was scrapped.

"In a sense, there was nothing to be politically gained (by the authorities) by releasing these people.

"What if they'd gone on the street and committed a high profile crime? Then there would have been a great uproar — 'We had them behind bars, who let them out?' "

He said he hoped the study would lead in the coming year to ending the habitual status of at least some of the prisoners or to a modified parole procedure so they wouldn't be sent back to jail unnecessarily.

Colonist publisher retires

Two days before the Colonist was to publish for the last time, Richard Bower, the last publisher of the 121-year-old daily, went into retirement.

"It's only fitting that I should retire," Bower said Friday.

"I'm feeling sad. I think Victoria will be the poorer for this," he said about the merger next week of the two Victoria dailies into the Times-Colonist.

"A newspaper is a living thing and its demise cannot be felt but as a tragedy."

But Bower said the new publication has every potential of becoming an excellent product.

"It's got a great and experienced staff and better resources than the two papers before," he said.

Bower became publisher of the Colonist in 1960 after reporting experience in Britain, Rhodesia and Winnipeg, where he worked for Free Press.

"It's been a good 20 years," Bower said.

"By some standards, the Colonist would be considered a small newspaper, but I can look back on many accomplishments of the newspaper," he said.

"We've had a fine group of people — working, talented newspaper people — both upstairs and downstairs, and I've always been proud of the standards sought and met."

Camosun classes Tuesday

Camosun College is preparing for a new school season as usual Tuesday in spite of the strike of its 155 non-teaching employees who walked off the job at 3 p.m. Friday.

"The main point we want to get across is that our classes will proceed as scheduled Tuesday," principal Lloyd Morin said as members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees struck Camosun's three campuses.

However, Morin's hopes could be dashed by a large part of the teaching staff.

Vocational instructors, who reportedly make up about half of the teaching staff, are members of the B.C. Government Employees' Union, a union that traditionally honors picketlines.

Other teachers belong to the independent Faculty Association and their intentions are unknown.

The two groups supply the college with an estimated 240 full-time instructors.

On the question of crossing picketlines, Morin said: "That's a decision they (teachers) will have to make. The indications I have are that the faculty will be reporting."

The situation arises at a time when the college has had particularly heavy registration. Morin estimates those attending classes on a regular and irregular basis will total 3,000.

The union has been in a legal strike position since Monday.

Following a study session Tuesday, union representatives presented college authorities with a new proposal and agreed to wait suntil the college board had met Thursday evening before taking any further action.

CUPE staff representative Pete Driedger said the board reported Friday morning it had rejected the union proposal but gave the union three new proposals.

Driedger said only one issue appears to be blocking settlement at this point. The union, he said, would have been willing to accept the proposed one-year agreement with one added provision — a review aimed at resolving the "inadequate buying power" that had existed since 1977 as a result of the former wage and price control period.

It would be a matter, he said, of establishing what the true 1977 rates of pay should have been.

Said Morin: "We felt the board had responded with as realistic an offer as was possible. They had wanted to catch up on the years of the AIB, but that would be five years after the fact."

The college offered a 9.75 per cent wage increase and a cost-of-living adjustment. The union had sought 12 per cent retroactive to April 1 and another three per cent Oct. 1.

The offered increase would nudge the basic rate to about $6 an hour, according to the union.

None injured as plane flips while landing

Three persons escaped unharmed when a light plane flipped over while landing at a small airstrip on Mayne Island Friday.

The mishap occurred at about 5:30 p.m.

The plane, a Piper Pacer, was piloted by Phil Jarman of Mayne Island and carried two passengers, Peter Smith, 51, also an Island resident, and an unidentified visitor.

Damage to the plane was minor.

Gas rig explosion off Texas kills two

PORT O'CONNOR, Tex. (AP) — An offshore gas rig exploded and caught fire about 35 nautical miles out in the Gulf of Mexico today, killing at least two people and injuring six others, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

Three people were missing, said Lieut. Steve Sparks, a spokesman for the coast guard in Corpus Christi, Tex. Nineteen were evacuated safely late Friday after the rig, known as the Ocean King, "experienced serious pressure buildups," he said.

Sparks said six people injured in the blast were taken to two hospitals. Four were reported in serious but stable condition at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston, Tex., while two were at Corpus Christi's Memorial Hospital. Their conditions could not immediately be determined.

He said the rig, owned by the New Orleans-based Ocean Drilling and Exploration Co., was still burning at mid-morning.

Coast guard spokesmen said the explosion was reported about 6:20 a.m. local time and that rescue vessels from Port O'Connor and Port Aransas, as well as a rescue helicopter from Corpus Christi, were sent out.

Helicopters from Cities Service Oil and Gas Co. aided in the rescue.

There was no initial report on the cause of the explosion.

Chinese gangs turn violent: police

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police here fear the activity of Chinese gangs — with members and friends totalling more than 200 — is on the upswing, and they are attempting to control the violence that normally accompanies such activity.

A report on organized crime submitted to Canadian police chiefs last week calls special attention to the Chinese communities of Vancouver and Toronto. It says organized Chinese-Canadian criminals and youth gangs "have been involved in and control several aspects of organized crime including gambling, prostitution, heroin importation and distribution and extortion."

"They do not hesitate in resorting to violence and murder to achieve their goals," the report says.

Two Chinese gangs currently operating in Vancouver are the Lotus Family and the Red Eagles, police say.

Two members of the Lotus Family said during an interview that they don't consider themselves a gang, but a group of friends who socialize together.

While they said the Lotus Family had been troublesome in the past, its members, aged 16 to 22, now confine their questionable activity to drinking, smoking marijuana, taking pills and fighting, they said.

And, with little exception, they said they fight only in retaliation of attacks on their friends by other youths — generally Red Eagles, who police say form the largest and most criminally active gang in Vancouver.

The Red Eagles, like the Lotus Family, said they don't want to start trouble. But the Red Eagles apparent acceptance of extreme violence to arbitrate even minor disputes sets them apart.

"Quite often it's just a misunderstanding," said one member. "But we don't want to waste time to explain. It would look like we were begging them."

Dr. Curt Griffiths, a criminology professor at Simon Fraser University, has studied the city's street scene and warns that Vancouver could be only a few years behind San Francisco in gang activity.

He said it is inevitable that the traditionally tight-knit Chinese family unit will continue to break down in North America, creating more problems for authorities.

"There are rumblings right now," says Constable Tony Needham of the Vancouver Integrated Intelligence Unit.

Needham, assigned to gang activity for the last year and a half, said only a small fraction of Chinese youths, mostly arrivals from Hong Kong, are involved.

A Chinatown lawyer said the gangs are not of great community concern, because most citizens are not affected.

But he said Chinese who are victimized by criminals often ignore the incident rather than call authorities.

"They believe in acceptance of things as they come," he said. "They don't want to rock the boat too much."

Gov't will pay 11% on unpaid bills

For the first time, B.C. government ministries will be required to pay interest on overdue commercial accounts under a new policy approved by cabinet this week.

The measure is aimed chiefly at speeding up bill payment by the government, Finance Minister Hugh Curtis said Friday.

Slow payment by government has been a constant complaint of B.C. businesses in the past, a ministry spokesman said.

Curtis said the rate of interest will be one per cent below the prime lending rate of commercial banks and will be calculated every six months. Initial rate, effective Aug. 1, 1980, has been set at 11¼ per cent.

Interest will be paid on accounts which remain unpaid more than 60 days. The policy will also apply where the government is slow in returning overpayment of taxes, royalties or fees to individuals or businesses.

"Government suppliers should not have to carry unpaid accounts on their books for periods of more than 60 days," Curtis said. "Many suppliers of goods and services are small business firms and late payment by government creates very serious hardship for such firms in terms of their cash flow."

Individual ministries will be responsible for paying the interest on their own overdue accounts.

Curtis said it is difficult to predict how much the payment program will cost.

Prisoners riot in camp

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Prisoners took over and set fire to a correctional work camp near here Friday but RCMP regained control of the camp in less than three hours.

S.Sgt. A. D. Fraser said about 30 RCMP officers took 35 prisoners into custody at the minimum-security Hudta Lake camp 50 kilometres southwest of here.

He said the prisoners will be taken to Prince George.

One report suggests the disturbance may have begun when a party involving moonshine got out of hand.

Three corrections branch employees were taken to hospital with undetermined injuries.

RCMP said three prisoners escaped during the disturbance and but were later recaptured.

The camp's administration building was destroyed by the fire but the barracks were not damaged.

Coal port expansion official

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Roberts Bank coal port expansion project was officially started Friday when federal Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin and provincial ministers signed a formal agreement to proceed with the $47.7-million expansion.

Pepin said capacity of the port will double in five years to about 24.5 million tonnes.

B.C. Industry Minister Don Phillips described the agreement as good for Canada and British Columbia.

Included in the agreement is a $1.5-million allocation to study navigational, habitat and social impact of the expansion.

It was also announced that the federal and provincial governments will cooperate in a study of B.C.'s freight and passenger terminals. The study, to be completed next spring, will determine what facilities need expansion or upgrading.

It will not cover National Harbors Board port facilities nor will it investigate the province's four harbor commissions.

Murder charge against boy

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A 12-year-old boy was charged with murder Friday after another boy was shot while a group of children played cowboys and Indians on the outskirts of this city.

RCMP said Darren Warkentine, 14, of Prince George died from .22-calibre bullet wounds to the chest.

The accused, whose name wasn't released because he is a juvenile, was remanded in custody to Tuesday when he appeared in provincial court. He also is charged with attempted murder and dangerous use of a firearm.

Doukhobors' fast passes 32nd day

BURNABY (CP) — Three Sons of Freedom Doukhobor women imprisoned at the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre near Vancouver were in the 32nd day of a hunger strike Friday to protest sentences handed out to two of them.

Deputy warden Esther McMullen said the three elderly women seemed to be in stable condition since agreeing earlier this week to accept a nutrient mixture administered daily by tube through their nostrils.

Previously, the three had been taking only a sugar solution intravenously.

The three, all Grand Forks residents, were identified as Nellie Koodrin and Tima Jmaeff, both sentenced in June to seven-year terms for the burning of the home of the leader of a rival Doukhobor sect; and Mary Braun, awaiting trial on a charge of setting a fire in the Grand Forks courthouse in July.

School bus transportation, subject to available seating space, will be provided for:

KINDERGARTEN — Pupils regardless of distance to the nearest elementary school in which a Kindergarten class has been established.

A.M. — Such pupils enrolled in the morning sessions will be transported to the school on regular bus runs. However, as the numbers do not warrant a special run at noon, the parents of such pupils may apply for a transportation allowance in lieu.

P.M. — As school bus transportation to the afternoon session is not provided, the parents of such pupils enrolled in the afternoon sessions may apply for a transportation allowance in lieu. Such pupils will be transported home on regular after-school bus runs.

GRADES 1-8 — Students of grades 1-8 inclusive, living more than 2½ miles from the school in their attendance area, will be provided with transportation. However, when space is available on the school bus, the students living nearest to the 2½-mile walk limit will be given preference for that space.

GRADES 9-12 — Students of grades 9-12 inclusive, living more than 3 miles from their attendance area school, will be provided with transportation. However, when space is available on the school bus the students living closest to the 3-mile walk limit will be given preference for that space.

The parents of a pupil living in an isolated area and for whom school bus transportation cannot be provided, may apply for a transportation allowance.
Mileage distances are calculated by the most direct route on established roads or walk areas. The distance is computed from the home property access at the road to the entry at the school site.
School bus service is provided at the discretion of the Board of School Trustees. Eligibility for bus transportation can be determined through your school Principal. Application forms are available at the school and must be completed immediately. Request for any additional information about the bus schedules should be referred to the Physical Plant Department, 2125 Keating X Road, 652-9433.
Every effort has been made to establish the bus routes to serve the greatest number of students who are entitled to school bus transportation in accordance with existing School Board Policy.

NOTE:

On September 2, 1980, schools will open at the above times but it is expected that most schools will be dismissed in the early afternoon.
If necessary, minor revisions might have to be made to the above scheduling to compensate for possible overload factors on some routes.
Pupils are requested to board only their correct buses and to be at Bus Stops five minutes before bus leaving time. All times given subject to change.
For information regarding this schedule, please contact Mrs. M. Dew at 652-9433.

A matter of opinion

Take time to read the column by Richard Gwyn on this page, then come back to read this.

We're publishing the Gwyn column at the same time as we take sharp issue with it because that's what this page is about. Opinions, different opinions for you to weigh, not just ours.

But we think you're quite wrong on some points, Richard.

You report the Vancouver Sun and Province are going to merge. The owners say they are not. Time will tell.

You're wrong when you talk about the only important independent newspapers left being in Toronto. You ignore the London Free Press, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, the Regina Leader Post and the Kingston Whig-Standard, to name just four.

It's time somebody noted that competition doesn't guarantee newspaper readers will be better served. When competition limits the resources of opposing newspapers, it may do just the reverse.

But what really bugs us is that final paragraph — where you say that daily print journalism in Canada has been passed from people who care about what's in their newspapers for their readers, to people who only care what's in their newspapers for themselves and their shareholders.

If you're talking about us, the people who produce the papers, you're dead wrong. We care a heck of a lot — and we're going to prove it.

Good resolutions

The Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police has had for years the reputation of being a rather stuffy organization, devoted to extreme law-and-order causes, sometimes perhaps to the detriment of the rights of ordinary citizens.

The association showed this week that the reputation is no longer deserved — if it ever was.

The majority of the resolutions it passed at its annual convention are ones that every citizen should support.

Police chiefs want to change the law to make it easier to convict persons who use toy pistols or fake explosives during robberies.

They want to be able to protect foreign embassies and diplomatic staffs, including keeping demonstrations away if it seems they may turn violent.

They want to control "head-shops" which now sell legally paraphernalia that can be used only in connection with illegal drugs.

These are all steps that would help police in their fight against crime without taking away any rights from the ordinary citizen. As such, they should be supported by all Canadians.

Reading for the summer

On the Pacific coast this has been a short, dismal summer for outdoor holidays. But the rain and chill were good for reading, especially in a wilderness camp, before an open fire of sparkling logs, with no television and chattering pundits to interrupt your thoughts.

A disappointing season, all the same, for the reader who takes books, like marriage, not lightly nor ill-advisedly. Such a reader will have noticed, among other alarms, the decay of the detective story (and let no one belittle an art practised by Shakespeare with murders innumerable, by Poe, Dickens, Conrad and many men of genius.)

Nowadays it is about as easy to find a satisfactory detective story as a needle in a haystack or any sense in the course of human events. The connoisseur is confronted by the identical detective in all stories, a plagiarism of that ruffian, James Bond, who shoots half a dozen crooks in his daily rounds, is hurled from a skyscraper, tortured by Russian spies, maimed by a bomb, and is then well prepared for a night of sexual orgy, described in clinical specifics. He gets to be a bore.

No successors

Alas, Sherlock Holmes, Father Brown, Hercule Poirot, and even the cardboard Perry Mason have no successors worthy of the book addict. For observe that reading, though Francis Bacon said it maketh a full man, does become an addiction harder to cure than liquor or tobacco. Like the drunkard who swallows wood alcohol or vanilla extract, the reader will read anything, even the bilingual runes on cornflake boxes if nothing better is at hand.

In our camp desperate guests from the city have thumbed through Dunn's paralyzing history of mediaeval drainage laws until it is in tatters. David Copperfield is almost illegible from abuse and Mr. Pickwick's immortal Papers, are missing vital pages — the wear and tear of literature, the havoc of time's inexorable march.

No man until he has reached a sufficient age can he read with complete freedom of choice, and without shame, when he seeks no more knowledge or education. He reads for pleasure while the young read (if they read at all) to improve their minds. Once improvement is impossible, not before, the true enjoyment of books can begin.

It is commonly said that you can judge a man's character by his library but, like most current assumptions, this is dubious. A learned scholar's bookshelves may contain a miscellany of trash among the classics. If he is also a human being he should not be disparaged and cannot be reformed.

Nor can the mere collector, the compulsive miser, like a boy who hoards dead butterflies, or the famous American statesman of my acquaintance who boasts of more than 20,000 volumes filling a huge room in New York but has read less than half of them, planning to approach the rest after his retirement, as if he would live for a hundred years or more.

Worse is the borrower of books who seldom returns them. Still worse the lender who forces them upon you in mistaken charity, never suspecting that he has invaded your privacy — an offence not yet codified in law.

Saddest of all are the books themselves. The addict must wonder what will happen to the printed companions of his life, his most faithful friends, when he has gone. Where will they go and how will they be treated by strangers who may never read or understand them?

Perhaps into some second-hand store, if they are lucky, and find new, compassionate owners. More likely into a furnace or mechanical shredder, unread and unregretted — a melancholy thought in this dying summer when the morning mists on the lake and the first yellow maple leaf proclaim the autumn — too melancholy for the true book lover.

Biographies

Still, even such a summer may have offered him some compensation — a splendid new biography of King Charles II, for instance, attempting to prove that, with his uncounted bastards, he was quite a nice fellow; a biography of Julius Caesar showing him to be a genocidal enthusiast as systematic as Adolf Hitler; and a biography of Henry VIII who, snatching a moment between marriages and murders, decreed that all Englishmen must wear hats to protect the felt industry.

From him a protectionist Canadian government could learn how to nourish the textile and shoe industries. But what does the government read, if it reads anything besides suffocating statistics and daily cabinet leaks? What books have conditioned the pre-budgetary mind of Allan MacEachen in the Gaelic hermitage of Cape Breton and with what frightening results? We have no right to ask that question, even of a democratic government. Reading, like love, is a private affair.

Richard Gwyn

Amid sense of rage, shock

OTTAWA — The jugs of Italian wine had been emptied, and only a couple of bottles of beer remained, and it was around midnight, when the telephone rang. A guest sitting near the phone answered it, assuming it was a baby-sitter calling him or some other guest.

Then, as he listened, his face hardened, and his head tilted back. After he put down the phone, he told us he was out of a job. His employer, the Ottawa Journal, had just shut the presses, and had thrown away the key.

The others left quickly, leaving the four of us, him and his wife, Sandra and I, to sit around and finish the beer and talk about the general rottenness of life. Also, about our sense of impotence.

Modern nomads

Just how rotten life is, and just how impotent journalists are, took us another half-day to learn. The Winnipeg Tribune also is gone. So is the Vancouver Sun, to be merged into its rival, The Province. So is the FP News Service.

About 1,000 people, many of whom I've known personally, and with whom I've worked or against whom I've competed, have been transformed abruptly into latter-day nomads, searching for that most basic of all necessities — a job, an income, an occupation, from which each, like all of us, will derive so much of his former sense of self-worth.

It isn't easy to think, amid a sense of shock, and of rage, and, let's face it, of an acute awareness that, 'There but for the luck of the corporate draw go I'.

But about this emasculation of journalism, several points demand to be made.

The first point is precisely that: By what's been done, journalism in Canada hasn't been merely rearranged or reduced in economic scale, but it has been emasculated. The two newspaper chains, Southam's and Thomson's, now have divided Canada between them, as Spain and Portugal once divided the New World. The only important independent newspaper that remain are The Star and The Toronto Sun, and its satellites in Edmonton and Calgary. Except in Toronto, newspaper competition has ceased to exist.

Journalists, obviously, will lose the most. Our options have been forshortened. We'll become, without ever admitting it and even without realizing it, less bold, less brash, more calculating about the price of dissent, not so much from our employers (who to most reporters are remote authority figures), as from the ebb and flow of the public opinion of the moment, which, as it should be, already is the dominant infuence upon the way journalists go about their work.

The change will be subtle, but as it happens, readers will be the losers. Readers will discover that they are less and less often provoked or challenged or even excited, as opposed to being entertained, but in a calculated neutral way, like a TV afternoon soap.

Newspapers aren't the be-all and end-all of journalism. TV and radio stations still will compete. But even though the surveys show that more people now glean more of their news from TV than from print, newspapers remain the backbone of journalism. The hair-blown personalities who pop up on your screens measure themselves as professionals by what their scribbling colleagues have got into the newspapers. As what you read becomes more flaccid, so will what you see and hear.

Those who will gain by this emasculation of the profession will be, as is obvious also, Thomson's and Southam's. In 1979, these companies earned respectively a 37 and a 31 per cent rate of return on invested capital, which, among Canada's top 200 companies, ranked them respectively 10th and 21st in performance.

Cries of anguish

Here's the second point to be made about this affair. Skip over the question whether, because of their operating losses, the Ottawa Journal and Winnipeg Tribune had to be closed down. Fix instead upon the question whether, out of the yet higher rates of return Southam's and Thomson's now will make out of journalism, either intends to re-invest in journalism.

Read the statements of the two companies. You'll find in each, pious regrets and cries of financial anguish — and nothing else. The language of accountants and of pr men, in other words, but not of newspapermen.

This is the last point to be made. Except now for a handful of newspapers, Canadian daily print journalism has been turned over from people who care about what's in their newspapers for their readers, to people who care what's in their newspapers for themselves and their shareholders. Which is the way Spain and Portugal treated their empires.

Down memory lane

I joined the Victoria newspaper industry exactly one decade ago. Labor Day weekend, 1970. I became a reporter for The Daily Colonist, my first full-time job in the industry.

The industry itself has changed immeasurably in those 10 years: the coming of the age of the computer, the increasing consolidations, the gloomy economic facts that just this week saw two more Canadian newspapers shut down.

Looking back, Victoria and B.C. have changed much less. A re-reading of the Colonists of September, 1970, shows that the residents and politicians of this city were concerned in those days about many of the same issues that are concerning them now.

Stories on the future of the Reid site and the Inner Harbor appeared at least three times a week. Those were the days when developer Sandy Reid wanted to build a huge hotel complex on the waterfront site. He even agreed, at the request of then-mayor Courtney Haddock, to add a convention centre to the facility. Peter Pollen, then an alderman, was leading the opposition to the plan.

The month opened with the release of a survey that the downtown core was receiving an ever-decreasing share of the shopping and business being done in Greater Victoria. The shift towards suburban shopping malls had started. Some downtown businessmen were concerned; others hoped that new projects, such as Centennial Square, would reverse the trend.

The debate had begun about future expansion or moving of the Victoria General Hospital, still known then as St. Joseph's. Arguments were raging about whether the hospital should find a new home or whether it should try to expand in its present location. And controversy was boiling over how much say the regional hospital planning board should have in the affairs of individual hospitals — a controversy still raging today over the issue of locating pediatric and obstetrical facilities.

Promises were being made about upgrading bus service on the Saanich Peninsula; the residents feared it was about to be eliminated.

The E and N Dayliner had just received a new car, capable of carrying 72 passengers instead of the previous 49. Plans were being made for special excursion trips, including some to Port Alberni.

Premier W.A.C. Bennett headed off to a federal-provincial conference determined to get a better deal for B.C. in terms of economics and resources. He was complaining that B.C. industries received less support from Ottawa than did those of any other province, and was also encouraging Prime Minister Trudeau and his colleagues to give the provinces joint control over the banking system.

Pat McGeer was still leader of the Liberal Party and gained credit for mediating a successful conclusion to a labor dispute in the pulp industry.

Dan Campbell, then municipal affairs minister, was warning that amalgamation would be a long, slow process of evolution in Greater Victoria. However, politicians were trying to get preliminary amalgamation meetings going, perhaps using the regional district as a vehicle.

The University of Victoria was looking for student housing, but (slightly more optimistically than in 1980) saying it believed all students needing housing would find something.

The federal government was promising immediate action to clean up the long-standing labor relations mess in the post office.

It would be unfair, however, to say that nothing has changed in the intervening decade. Prices have, for one. In 1970, ordinary apartments were renting for an average of $125-$135 per month. Three-bedroom houses could be obtained for $160 a month.

Houses were selling for anywhere from $15,000 to $30,000. A few could be found more cheaply — for as little as $12,000.

Mid-week supermarket ads showed round steak roast for 99 cents per pound, liver for 49 cents per pound, and 48-ounce tins of tomato juice for 33 cents.

And a few problems have been solved. The Johnson-Begbie-Shelbourne traffic route was still in the planning stages in 1970. Now it carries thousands of cars efficiently every day.

The old Mediation Commission Act that led to such chaos in labor relations has been replaced by a Labor Code that has significantly reduced the labor disruptions in the province.

And the Achievement of the Decade Award should really go to Camosun College, which was in the most preliminary planning stages in September, 1970.

In their own shadow

NEW YORK — We were one hour into the Picasso exhibit when we stopped in front of a cubist painting called "The Accordionist."

Behind us were five huge rooms full of gorgeous Impressionist children and massive seated women, of perfectly reproduced realism, of shattered forms of revolutionary cubism.

At the bottom of this one picture, we checked the date: 1911. He had done all this before his 30th birthday.

The age impressed me more than it did the 12-year-old next to me. We live on opposite sides of that dividing line. Yet we were both struck by the volume and versatility of Picasso's life work in this exhibit.

Surrounded, even overwhelmed, as we moved among the 900 Picassos that have taken over the Museum of Modern Art for the summer in a massive retrospective, it was obvious why this man still dominates art the way Shakespeare dominates literature or Mozart dominates music.

It is said that when Picasso was a teen-ager, his artist-father gave the boy his own palette, brushes and colors, and never painted again. It is known that when he died at the age of 91, Picasso was arranging for a show of his latest work. In between he was astonishingly productive.

Here was a man who produced some 13,000 to 14,000 canvases, 100,000 prints or engravings, and 34,000 book illustrations. He worked in virtually every medium from stage sets to ceramics, ranging back and forth from one to the other with as much energy as genius.

Yet as we wandered through the last 30 years of his life, you could see it all slip. The exhibit kindly excludes the commercial peace doves and greeting-card poster art of the last years.

But still, it is easy to see the versatility turning frenetic, the search turning downhill. There is even a sense that perhaps he began to imitate himself — not just to create, but to create "Picassos."

No, there is nothing bad on these walls. The worst of this artist is very, very good. But winding down through his age and out again onto 54th St., it was hard not to wonder what it was like to be Picasso at 70, or 80, or 90, competing with Picasso at 40.

What is it like to keep working in the present while your past has already been written into history books? What is it like to compete with your own best?

It is something that I've thought of before. I've thought of it whenever Tennessee Williams turns up in the news, alive but rarely well, writing poorly in comparison to his own brilliant retrospectives. I've thought of it when Frank Sinatra goes on stage, all blue eyes and strained vocal cords. They are pale versions of themselves.

Living in your own shadow is a problem of aging athletes and beautiful women and artists and actors and, to an extent, all of us.

The American ideal is that people should quit with the gold medals around their necks and the stars on their doors.

We want them to stay on top or move on. We want to laurelize them like Jesse Owens or ignore them like Mark Spitz. We hope that, like Beverly Sills, they will "move on" at the right moment, off of one stage and on to the next . . . before their voices crack in public.

There are very few ways for our stars to retreat gracefully back into the chorus line. We live in such an achievement-oriented world that anyone who is not doing his or her best, breaking records, going onward and upward, is somehow or other failing.

We feel saddened that Joe DiMaggio sells coffee-makers and uncomfortable that Willie Mays "stayed too long." Few of us know quite how to deal with the man or woman who "used to be" somebody.

Picasso was hardly a failure in his later life. He refused to be canonized. He refused to rest on his laurels. He chose productivity. He got up in the morning, nearly paralyzed by pessimism about his own ability, and went to work.

There is something, not sad but remarkable, in this refusal to "act his age," or to retire gracefully. Surrounded by his own collection of his favorite cubist work, he must have known his limits. But out of compulsion or conviction, he kept working.

"Creation," Picasso said, "is the only thing that interests me." So for 91 years, he did something remarkable. He stayed interested.

Striking workers listen to negotiations at Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk this week

'The rich getting richer'

By JOHN VINOCUR
New York Times

GDANSK — It was about 4 o'clock, the sun was sinking behind the roof of the brick buildings of the Lenin shipyards, and a guy with a beard and beret, a Baltic Che Guevara type, had turned his portable radio to the Polish-language service of the BBC. Men in workclothes pressed around him, straining to catch the wavering voice from London, listening hard to hear about themselves.

They were the lead item, as usual, and they took it with more gravity than pride. All their leaders, some changed to business suits, worn with flannel shirts buttoned to the neck, were inside a conference hall grinding down the government position with their resilience, stubborness and discipline. But the workers, in blue workclothes most hadn't changed in two weeks, were out in the yard, listening to the radio. The strength of the Polish labor upheaval and its reason for being, they talked about the news and they talked about themselves.

Sense of irony

No leader, no theoretician, no revolutionary, Marian Zaczyk told about his life and the strike with a kind of easy dispassion, balancing out the details of a worker's existence with a real sense of irony. The delivery is Hoosier-slow, the sting a bit delayed, a kind of delivery that the Smothers Brothers would have liked. At 40 years of age, he makes about $280 a month at the official rate of exchange as a qualified mechanic. He lives with his wife, 14-year-old son and 7-year-old daughter, in an apartment that costs about $50 a month in rent, and owns a small car. "The very happy Polish worker," he says.

"Oh yeah," he adds, "I ought to mention something." His mother-in-law lives with them. They live in three small rooms. But that's actually an improvement because from 1964 to 1976 he lived in the same apartment with 11 people, members of the family. There was one toilet. "Privacy?" "Love life?", he said, posing rhetorical questions. "You'd have to wait up very late until everyone else was snoring, or just let it go until the summer when you could go outside."

The apartment is heated by an individual coal-burner which Zaczyk has to supply himself, a considerable problem because coal is scarce, and the buyer must transport it, hundred-pound weight by hundred-pound weight, himself. Coal is like ham or sausage here: sometimes a rare commodity; so are apartments. You would think that since the end of the Second World War the government would have built enough new housing, Zaczyk says, "but I'm still dragging that coal."

He took no vacation this year because he wanted to help relatives with the harvest on their farm. He would like a little patch of his own and a small cottage to go with it, but the fact is, he says, a worker cannot find the bricks and cement necessary to build a place without connections. All this is said without great rancor, as Zaczyk, who has brown eyes and black hair that he combs straight back, lies propped up on one elbow on a lawn near the shipyard administration office.

But a little more heat comes when he is asked about what the strike is about. Absolutely not about money or apartments or petty grievances, he says. "It's for a free trade union. This is the idea: the worker can go and ask for his rights and do it while he is protected against the red bourgeoisie."

The last phrase, the equivalent of trouble with the police in other, more orthodox times, came rolling out as easily as it might from a speaker's rostrum during Captive Nations Week in Chicago.

Freedom of expression, the freedom to distribute the union's own newspapers, were absolutely basic needs, Zaczyk said. "Of course," he went on, "we've got all the same freedoms people do in the United States. A Pole can call the American president any name he pleases. And he can buy absolutely anything — if he has the dollars."

Zaczyk's vocabulary was totally political, his restraint non-existent. During the Baltic Port strike in 1970 in which about 100 workers died, he served as a messenger between the striking shipyards, and later was questioned by the police. The authorities tried to intimidate him, but it didn't do any good, he said, and his attitude remained unchanged.

"What I see here," Zaczyk said, is what has happened since the beginning of time all over the world. After the war, they started out well in Poland, with most people being more or less equal, but then it fell apart. Now, it's the rich getting richer — I mean our privileged people — and the rest of us getting poorer.

"There's got to be some kind of control over those who are ruling. They live like Westerners. There's a bunch of people who are surrounded by the police and the military and they do whatever they want."

The Polish government, he said, had filled people's heads with cosmonauts, and big factories and projects, and endless pictures on television of workers in the West on strike. "What we learned was to laugh at the cosmonauts, think that we'd do better with no so many big things and more little ones, and get a pretty good idea of how you run a strike. How stupid could they think we were?"

Getting nervous

His concerns for the outcome of the strike were considerable. He felt some of his co-workers growing nervous, more from the activity in the shipyards than concern for their future, and he was worried that the strike committee would somehow dilute the demands for more freedom. "If we let go now," Zaczyk said, "the jails will be full again just as soon as things get quiet."

When someone asked him how he thought it would all turn out and what his hopes were, Zaczyk turned aside the questions with a slow, sly grin. "My big hope is the Polish National Lottery," he said. "You get great Polish odds. To win a million you have to lose five million first."

Polish recipe

By MICHAEL DOBBS
Manchester Guardian

GDANSK, Poland — As the Polish journalist surveyed the committee hall at the Lenin shipyard crammed with strikers' delegates from some 300 factories, he kept repeating one sentence over and over again: "I never thought I would live to see such a scene in Poland."

In Poland, over the last fortnight, much that was previously unthinkable has now become thinkable. The extraordinary scenes in Gdansk — of conflict, of uninhibited free speech, of unity and discipline among the strikers — are a measure of that change.

The movement for independent trade unions in Poland has grown from scattered groups of dissident activists to what can only be described as a huge and efficient mass organization. So large has the movement become that it is difficult to see how it can either now be crushed by force or gently persuaded to disband itself.

Two weeks ago, 37-year-old Lech Walesa was an unemployed electrician harassed by the police because of his dissident activities and struggling to maintain his wife and six children. Hearing reports of protests at the Lenin shipyard because of the dismissal of another free trade union activist, Anna Walentynowicz, he climbed over the wall and began organizing the workers. Today he is the effective leader of hundreds of thousands of strikers along Poland's northern Baltic coast.

A shortish figure with a large moustache, he is greeted with cheers and chants wherever he appears in the yard. As he approaches the podium, his bodyguard clears reporters out of the way. He greets representatives of foreign trade unions with a clenched fist salute — and berates senior government ministers and Communist Party officials with his rasping voice.

So organized have the strikers become that they have set up their own secretarial unit, refreshment service, information office and "free printing press of the Gdansk shipyard." A well-produced, four-page bulletin of strike news called "Solidarnosc" appears daily, and earlier this week it produced its first "scoop:" what was claimed to be a letter from Gdansk comunist officials to the Central Committee in Warsaw.

The letter, which was dated several days ago, complained that attempts by party activists to talk to individual groups of strikers were getting nowhere. Concern, too, was expressed at the negative influence of the strikes on the formation of young people's attitudes.

Also published by Solidarnosc are jokes that shed light on the workers' grievances. One was entitled "Polish recipe:" "Take some ingredients in short supply, add a little salt and mix well with something that is temporarily not on the market. Add what we cannot afford. The mixture can be fried, baked or grilled."

More sarcastically, it went on: "We have all been eating this meal here. There is enough always for everybody. It is what the Polish economic miracle consists of."

Letters to the editor

I was deeply impressed by the strong, straight-from-the-shoulder stand against police strikes of Victoria police board member, Janet Baird.

It has impelled me to draw attention to the fact that of all the political parties, Social Credit has led the way in facing up to this vital, distressing problem. Witness that at its 1977 annual convention in Vancouver the B.C. Social Credit Party with about 1,300 delegates in attendance gave the government a clear and definite mandate for effective action against strikes in essential services, by passing the following resolution viz:

"WHEREAS all strikes are a decided inconvenience to some of the populace;

"AND whereas the striking of essential services magnifies the inconvenience to many more of the province's population;

"AND whereas the striking of ferry personnel is the most serious disruption affecting not only the travelling public, but the businesses catering to the tourist and other businesses, which depend for their livelihood on the tourist dollar:

"THEREFORE be it resolved that all essential services, including ferry workers, police, firemen, hospital employees, ambulance attendants, and those in water, electricity, B.C. railway, and/or oil and gas services, be covered by legislation outlawing these persons against striking." — M. Frank Hunter, 1320 Dallas Road.

Diplomat immunity

In defence of foreign diplomats being immune from arrest and punishment for breaking the laws of whatever country they are posted in, one must look further than the occasional misbehavior of foreign diplomats in our country.

The ruling must be international or non-existent, and it would be unthinkable to contemplate, for instance, any of our own diplomats being flogged for serving alcohol in their own homes — a law that exists in certain Eastern countries.

We must also consider what a prison sentence would represent in many backward countries — filth, malnutrition and possible physical abuse. Who would have the courage to join the diplomatic service, taking their wives and children with them, if this immunity was removed?

The country harboring an unruly foreign diplomat has the right to ask for his recall, and when this happens, punishment by their own authorities is decided on; this usually takes the form of demotion in rank, or, in grave cases, dismissal from the service.

Having served in the diplomatic service myself for 30 years, I know that all foreign offices of every country come down very hard if any report of misbehavior reaches them, from the country concerned. — Audrey Campbell, 2001 Runnymede Avenue.

No atrocities

If England and her friends had left Hitler alone in 1939, Germany would have solved the problems in Europe and the world would not be such a big mess today.

The German ideals were wonderful, the German soldier was mentally and physically superior and they were the best disciplined force in the world.

All this talk of atrocities is propaganda. I served four years in the Army and never saw anyone badly treated. And look at Germany today — the richest country in Europe. — Arnold L. Toth, 2615 Happy Valley Road.

Unjust bill

Although P. D. P. Holmes signs himself as president of the Downtown Businessmen's Association (letter, Aug. 23) and plumps for the double vote for non-resident businessmen, he says he is not a businessman himself. He represents clients.

Doesn't everyone in his or similar businesses do that? As for the taxes businessmen pay and complain so loudly about, don't we all pay taxes, excepting juveniles and indigents? The businessman may pay more but do we ever hear a peep about the profits he reaps?

Housing costs were the largest contributor to inflation in the country in recent months, the Consumer Price Index reports. In our area homes are out of reach for anyone but millionaires. But Mr. Holmes feels businessmen can contribute "valuable" ideas to our local and provincial governments. Do we need this kind of advice?

He counsels "right thing" people to support the double vote for the already advantaged businessman. In fact, all thinking people should protest this iniquitous and unjust bill with all vigor. — J. W. Thompson, 647 Michigan Street.

Constitutional talks leave premiers lots to discuss

OTTAWA (CP) — Provincial and federal constitutional negotiators closed their travelling roadshow Friday, leaving 12 still unresolved items for Prime Minister Trudeau and the 10 premiers to fight over at a conference here Sept. 8-12.

Junior ministers of the two levels of government failed to agree unanimously on any of the 12 issues being debated, although the federal government and most provinces agreed the principle of equalization payments should be enshrined in a new constitution and that the provinces should have more control over family law.

Claude Morin, Quebec intergovernmental affairs minister, was in an upbeat mood as he told reporters he was impressed and surprised that eight, nine and sometimes 10 provinces were able to agree on many issues. The federal government, however, did not share the majority opinion on these items.

All provinces, but not the federal government, agreed on a deal to give the provinces more control over off-shore resources — the pet project of the potentially oil-rich Newfoundland. An 11th-hour compromise by the federal government failed.

A possible breakthrough developed on Quebec's No. 1 priority — that the preamble to a new constitution assert the province's right to self-determination, a term usually meaning the province has the right to leave Confederation.

A preamble drafted this week referred to the 10 provinces as being "freely united." Everyone appeared to interpret the slogan differently but were generally pleased with it.

The ministers from the 11 governments began their final day of the summer-long exercise with the news that Opposition Leader Joe Clark believes a new constitution should be drafted by an assembly of provincial and federal politicians from both governing and opposition parties.

The proposal was dismissed as being unworkable and as coming too late. Federal Justice Minister Jean Chretien and Saskatchewan Attorney-General Roy Romanow, co-chairmen of the talks, and even Clark's Progressive Conservative colleague, Ontario Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Thomas Wells, said it would have been more helpful to the constitutional debate if Clark had told them his views on the 12 items.

Clark has said little about constitutional change since the May 20 Quebec referendum on sovereignty-association that generated this latest attempt at reform.

Despite the wide gulfs separating the provinces on such crucial issues as control over natural resources and the interprovincial flow of goods, capital and labor, both Chretien and Romanow said a disaster can be averted next month if all parties are willing to compromise.

"If there's a spirit of goodwill and understanding and compromise as we've seen in the last two days at this conference we stand a good chance to have a very good package at the end of the conference of first ministers," Chretien said.

New Brunswick Premier Richard Hatfield, the only premier participating in the preliminary talks, was asked to forecast the results of the September meeting and replied: "I couldn't answer that question to myself at 3 o'clock in the morning."

Hatfield said he was willing to compromise "a good deal" on many issues next month so the country could get a new constitution.

Ontario's Wells, the federal government's lone ally in the natural resource and interprovincial trade questions, said he was optimistic about the chances of success in September.

The passing of friends . . and what it was like

With the death of the Victoria Daily Times tonight (R.I.P.), we're going to have a double burial in our town. Two friends will have gone as after tomorrow the Colonist will be dead and departed too. Shocking isn't it?

But time marches on and next week the Times-Colonist will march ahead with — horrors! — most of us as night persons. On the other hand, there won't be any more 16-hour days that morning-men had to live with and never got paid for. So you win some, you lose some.

But that's sport. And in the past 30 years or so (yes, it's been that long), there are things left over.

Like where it all began with Sid Thomas of the Colonist, followed by the late Times sports ed Pete Sallaway, and his boss, Archie Wills, for that first chance; and Les Fox and Stuart Keate, among others, for preserving it and making it the fun it's been. .

There were associations and keen rivalries with friends like Ted Reynolds, Bill Stephenson, Keith MacKenzie, Jim Tang, Jim Eddie, Denny Boyd, Ron Coulter, George Gibson, et al. There were the road trips with hockey and baseball teams; writing stories from you'd never guess where, filing stories on the fly with the CN telegraph operator at the North Edmonton station, or maybe even getting to see heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson fight in Seattle.

There were the stories that never got told: Of trying to keep up with the night patrol of Kewpie Dick Barrett, trying to match Eric Bishop on his best days, identifying the Cougar hockey player who turned the firehose loose in a Saskatoon hotel, or getting Boyd down off the clothes hook where a Nanaimo lacrosse player hung him one night.

There was Lester Patrick who did so much for sport by bringing professional hockey back to the city; coach Roger Leger and Eddie Dorohoy who represented the players' contributions; crowds of 2-3,000 lining up for hockey tickets at the arena at 2 a.m.; 3,000 fans at soccer games; the start and the demise of professional baseball; the Miracle Mile between Roger Banister and John Landy; the rickety press box at the old Royal Athletic Park (why it never crashed is beyond those of us who survived); the interest shown by Bill Pynn, Ed Hall and Eddie Kelpin in youngsters wanting a start in baseball; the friendly advice of Tommy Restell, the best manager an aspiring baseballer could ever have.

Then there were the promotions, the extra-curricular stuff: The Times Golden Gloves, when boxing was legit; The Times Solarium Derby, Saanich Inlet full of boats with all proceeds to crippled children; the trips with Andy Anderson and on Joker Paton's yacht; the Times Island Open golf championship, still going under different direction; the Y-Times Track Meet, now one of the biggest events of its kind in the Northwest, the Times Juan de Fuca swims and the Times Public Parks Tennis Tournament, born out of a media strike.

There were also times when fans, it seemed, enjoyed the game more for the game's sake, and not because of the winning. Bob Peden wouldn't believe it, but there once was over 8,000 at the old ball park to watch Bob Jensen fire his high, hard one. There was also a guardian angel with a bankroll. His name was Fergusson-Pollock and he was drained of it all.

The Juan de Fuca swims were designed and orchestrated by Keate. The Times the leader. But the contestants. What a group. Flo Chadwick got $10,000 for just trying; Bert Thomas, an ex frogman with the build of a walrus, made it even though he was attacked by a shark (he said). There was also a garbageman from Toronto, a window washer from Vancouver, a short-order cook, an American sculptress, a Roman Catholic priest, a printer — all of them smeared with evil-smelling goo and lemming like, heaving themselves into the icy strait. There were 55 in all. Most failed. Cliff Lumsden didn't. Neither did Amy Holland. Ben Loughran got across on his 10th try, but it was Marilyn Bell who became everyone's darling. Thousands greeted her at Beacon Hill and there's a plaque there that tells it all.

Name dropping? Why not?. Like breakfast with the terrible-tempered Tommy Bolt, a round of golf at Colwood with Lefty O'Doul, a night with Archie Moore, many pleasant hours with a gentleman's pro, Bill Court; a night tour of Philadelphia with the owner of the Boston Braves; a session with Muhammad Ali, and a cherished association with Archie McKinnon, a maker of champions and just last week celebrating his 84th birthday. Happy birthday, Arch.

But it's all a jumble. It has to be.

Pro tennis had a fling. Pancho Gonzales, Pancho Segura, Jack Kramer — they all paid their dues in places like this, usually referred to as somewhere between here and there. And Gussie Moran — she pioneered lace panties at Wimbledon and showed 'em off here. And our national champs. The list is long and distinguished and the city should do something about it.

Sandown may be little Saratoga now, but racing always had its players, at Colwood, the Willows and even downtown. It was the job of a rookie reporter to get the entries then (illegally, of course). Now they come on the wire. The code was four knocks, one short, two long and a short. Bill Andrews, a policeman, worked the other side of the street.

Laterally, it was nice to have been in on the start. Philip Delesalle was a mere boy when an inquiring reporter heard of a standing ovation from a visiting Chinese gymnastic team and thought it might be a story. Now Philip's No. 1 in the nation. Then a tip from a pool hall. There's this shaggy-haired kid that can shoot some. So why not? Cliff Thorburn now is a world champion.

And all the other happenings, where do you link them in a look back at history.

I wouldn't know, and I won't try.

Except for the moon shots. Everybody's got a favorite. And this is were sport takes a back seat.

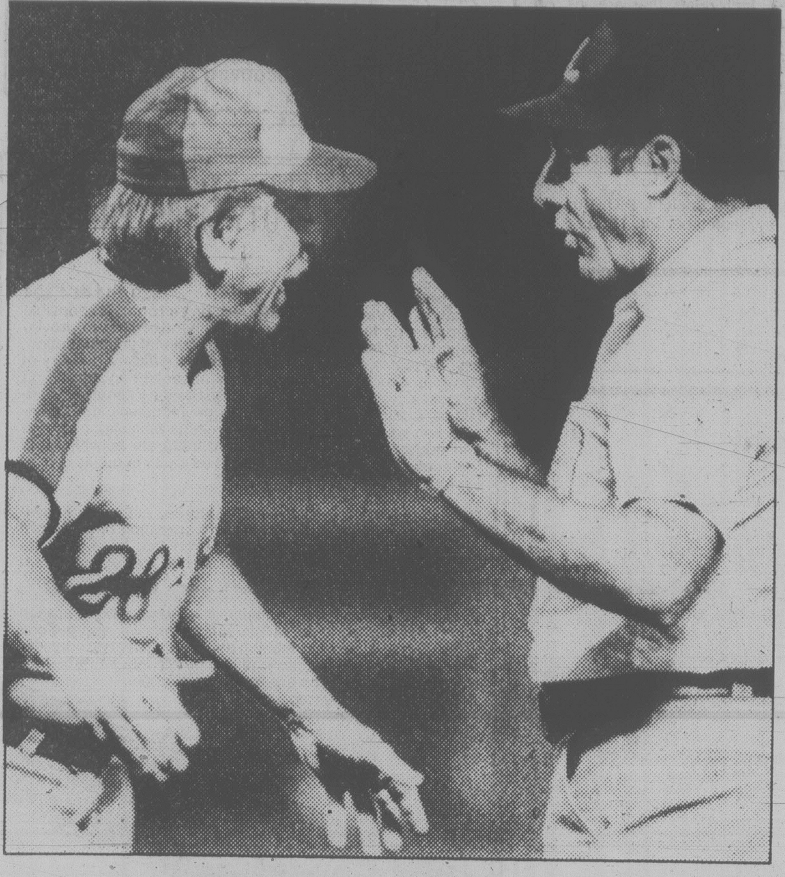
The moon shots were that giant step for mankind. And, given a choice, who wouldn't have wanted to have been a part of it? A secret dream that came too late.

But, alas. Now, it's as race announcer Jack Short would say:

Adios Amigos! And don't phone. I'll be sleeping in. (What's that like?)

By the way, I go again Sundays in that other paper. I think.

New lifestyle for Herzog



ALL IN VAIN is argument being waged by Montreal manager Dick Williams with first-base umpire John Kibler, who had called Warren Cromartie of Expos out in close fourth-inning play during National League baseball game Friday at Los Angeles. Williams lost argument and Dodgers won game, coming from behind on Rick Monday's three-run, sixth-inning double for 5-4 victory.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — After eight years as a major league player and 929 games as a manager, Whitey Herzog is leaving the playing field to take a job behind a desk — the general manager's desk of St. Louis Cardinals.

"I like to hunt, I like to fish, I like to go skiing," the 48-year-old Herzog said after being named the general manager of the National League baseball club. "I've never had to sit still before.

"I don't know what it will be like."

The naming of Herzog to the post Friday was a surprise, almost as much to the new executive as to the baseball world in general.

"I think it was toughest on my wife," Herzog said at a news conference of his decision to accept club president August A. Busch Jr.'s offer. "She said to me, 'Are you sure?

"'Do you think this is what you want?'"

Herzog said the 81-year-old Busch had contacted him earlier in the week and followed it up with a meeting Friday morning.

"I didn't want to manage the Cardinals if I didn't have control of my own destiny," Herzog said. "I want the Cardinals to get out of the doldrums.

An announcement from Busch said Red Schoendienst will replace Herzog on the field as interim manager, returning to coaching duties in 1981.

Schondienst, 57, was in the dugout as Herzog's temporary replacement Friday night and watched the Cards drop a 4-3 decision to Atlanta Braves.

In other action Friday, Willie Randolph lashed a tie-breaking single in the seventh inning and Bob Watson capped a four-run rally with a three-run homer, leading New York Yankees to a 5-1 victory over Seattle Mariners in an American League thriller.

Tommy John gained his 18th pitching victory of the season as the Yankees improved their lead in the AL East over Baltimore Orioles to 1½ games. The Orioles lost ground to the Yankees when they were beaten 5-0 by California Angels.

Hal McRae drove in four runs with a pair of home runs, a sacrifice fly and a single as Kansas City Royals defeated Texas Rangers 7-3. The Royals' George Brett homered and doubled in five at-bats as his major league-leading batting average remained at .404.

A record battle

Ontario, represented by Cold Springs Cats, scored in the top of the 21st inning Friday night to defeat and eliminate the host Saskatoon Angels 1-0 at the Canadian senior men's fastball championship in Saskatoon.

Seven tournament records were set and three were tied in the marathon. The records included most innings; longest game in time, 281 minutes; most innings pitched by a pitcher in a game — both winner Steve Virag and loser Dale Gunderson went the distance; and most strikeouts, 19 by each pitcher.

In Friday's second playoff game, which didn't finish until early today because of the length of the Ontario-Saskatoon contest, Saskatchewan, represented by Saskatoon All-O-Matic A's, edged St. John's. Capitals 1-0 to eliminate Newfoundland.

Six of the 13 teams entered in the tournament remain in the playoffs today: They are: Ontario, Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba's Winnipeg Colonels, Alberta's Camrose Merchants, and British Columbia, represented by New Westminster Terminal Pub.

The tournament winds up Sunday.

It was an unbroken pattern throughout the America's Cup summer off Newport, R.I. Dennis Conner won and the other guys talked optimistically of the big turnaround that never came.

By Friday, the New York Yacht Club selection committee had seen enough and placed the fate of its prized silver trophy in Conner's hands. He will sail Freedom in the 24th defence of sailing's top prize against the winner of the Australia-France 3 series in the best of seven finals beginning Sept. 16.

Ontario and Quebec were the only unbeaten teams as the Canadian women's field hockey championships narrowed to four teams in Edmonton.

In Friday's action, B.C. blanked New Brunswick 5-0 but then bowed 2-1 to Quebec. Di Whittingham of Victoria scored four goals in the victory while Dana Sinclair of Vancouver accounted for the only goal in the loss to Quebec.

Salmonbellies will represent the west in the national final for the Minto Cup against the winner of the Ontario playoff title, beginning Sept. 5 in New Westminster. It will be the Salmonbellies' first appearance in Cup final since 1968.

Rob Dalzell paced the winners with four goals and Barry Mawhinney counted twice to lead Burnaby, Minto Cup winner for the past three years.

Driver injured as spills mar Sandown racing

Two spectacular accidents marred the harness racing program at Sandown Raceway Friday night, but there was only one serious injury.

Miles Armstrong, who was driving Nealies Fort, was taken to hospital with a suspected leg fracture suffered when four horses and their drivers piled up in the sixth race.

Other drivers involved in the incident — Grant Hollingsworth, Leonard Hill and Greg Tonkin — were shaken up but were able to complete their assignments.

The mishap occurred when Shirley Mohawk, driven by Bob Boyd, caused interference. Nealies Fort went down and the other horses, Winsome Adios, Irish Splendor and Shady Hill Donna piled into the downed horse and rig.

The other accident took place in the third race and involved four horses.

The Wild Weed, driven by Joe Hudon, broke stride, and when Hudon tried to get out, Bay Bethany, driven by Greg Tonkin, had no place to go and went down. Fleeting Fame, driven by Hans Ericsson, and Dianes Man, handled by Keith Quinlan, piled into him.

Reports on condition of the horses involved were not expected until after examinations today.

Maple Winnie took the featured seventh.

The day's biggest payoff came when Sheraton N, Dunhoe and Deacon Brodie finished 1-2-3 in the eighth and produced a $911.20 triactor.

Harper clings to lead

Times News Services

Jamie Harper of Nanaimo lost his putting touch Friday but managed to stave off some hard-charging rivals and cling to a slim, one-stroke lead after the third round of the Canadian junior golf championship at Red Deer.

Harper, 16, missed several short putts on his way to a five-over-par 77 and a 54-hole total of 223. Stewart Elgie of Toronto held a hot hand on the greens and fired a one-under-par 71 to take over second at 224.

Marc Chamberland of Winnipeg had the day's best round — a two-under-par 70 — and shared third place with Craig Kindrat of Selkirk, Man.

For the second day in a row, Harper struggled on the front nine, where he had three bogies to make the turn at three over par.

"I putted really bad," he said. "I missed too many short putts."

Harper had no birdies and three of his five bogies were the result of sloppy putting.

Harper's play has slipped as the tournament has progressed and he said he would be on the practice green Friday night preparing for today's final round.

Meanwhile at Sidney, N.S., defending champion Anne Gookin, a former Truro, N.S., resident now living in Monument, Colo., shot a six-over-par 80 to win the Canadian senior women's championship.

Her 54-hole total of 244 was four shots better than Kay Kelleur of Toronto.

Gookin started the final round one stroke behind Monique Langlais of Boischatel, Que., but Langlais double-bogeyed 14 and bogeyed 15, 16 and 17 to finish at 249.

Joan Lawson of Victoria shot a final round 86 and finished ninth with 256.

In pro golf at Endicott, New York, Lee Trevino made up for a poor first round by blistering the En-Joie course with a seven-under-par 64 and gained a share of the lead in the $275,000 B.C. Open.

Tied with Trevino at six-under-par 136 are Peter Jacobsen, who won his first PGA tournament last week, first-round leader Artie McNickle and defending-champion Howard Twitty.

Jacobsen shot a 66 — second-best round of the day — to catch McNickle, while Twitty had a 69 and McNickle, who fired a 66 Thursday, shot 70.

"I three-putted the first hole yesterday," said Trevino, who had a lacklustre opening-round 72. "I didn't even go to the practice tee today."

Dan Halldorson of Brandon shot 68 to gain a share of 19th place at 139.

Jim Nelford of Burnaby, the only other Canadian in the field, shot 74 and was well back at 147.

Four players tied for second were Sandra Palmer, Myra Van Hoose, Cathy Mant and Connie Chillemi.

Ed Tougas of Burnaby Mountain shot par golf Thursday and Friday to win the B.C. PGA assistants' championship at Beach Grove with a 144 total. Tougas, the defending champion, won $500.

Dan Wellicome of Peace Portal shot a 71 Friday to take second with a 145 total. Neil Roberts of Beach Grove finished third, with rounds of 76 and 72.

Al Robertson of Glen Meadows in Sidney sunk a 30-foot birdie putt on the first extra hole to break a four-way tie for fourth spot at 149.

The top four will represent B.C. at the Canadian assistants' championship Sept. 22 to 24 in Brampton.

Linebacker traded

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Linebacker Don Goode, a first-round NFL draft choice of San Diego Chargers in 1974, has been traded to Cleveland Browns.

Rugby legend with tourists

Legendary English rugby great Roger Utley will lead a classy Northumberland County team in action against British Columbia Reps in an international match at 7:30 p.m. next Wednesday in Royal Athletic Park.

It will be a whole evening of rugby, in fact, as touring Stranmillis of Ireland plays Oak Bay Wanderers of the Vancouver Island Rugby Union's first division in preliminary contest at 6.

But most of the attention, of course, will be focussed on Northumberland and Utley. Now with the Wasps, Utley has played for and captained England, been a member of the glamor club Barbarians and has starred for the British Lions, the touring side that represents the British Isles overseas.

While Utley, a robust No.8, is without a doubt, Northumberland's key player, there are others stars on the club with international experience.

Centre or flyhalf Richard Breakey is a highly talented player who played for Scotland last season, scrumhalf Malcolm Young is an England international who has also played for the Barbarians and Steve Gustard, a winger who is the leading try-scorer for his club, Gosforth, is making his fifth visit this side of the Atlantic.

Seven Victoria players are on the B.C. team to play Northumberland — hooker Larry Chung of Castaways, front-row forward Gary Dukelow of UVic Vikings, second-row forward Chris Fowler of Oak Bay, flanker Gary Grant formerly of UVic and now working out with James Bay Athletic Association, No.8 Gary Johnston and front-row forward Ron McInnis both of James Bay and centre Paul Monaghan of Oak Bay.

TORONTO (CP) — Cliff Thorburn of Toronto will meet Terry Griffiths of Wales today and Sunday in the final of the Dufferin Cue Canadian snooker open at the Canadian National Exhibition.

Rain throws a damper on cricket test

LONDON (AP) — England captured two quick Australian wickets Friday before rain halted the centenary cricket Test match at Lord's. Australia, starting the second day of the five-day match with 227 runs for two wickets, increased its score to 278 for four in a little more than an hour. Graeme Woods, who scored 100 runs Thursday, was stumped off spinner John Emburey for 112. When rain stopped play, Kim Hughes, the Australian vice-captain, was 82 not out.

The match marks the 100th anniversary of the first Test match between England and Australia.

'Media massacre' deplored

Times News Services

The presidents of four international unions representing U.S. and Canadian newspaper employees called Friday for action to halt Southam Inc. and Thomson Newspapers Ltd. from destroying "the last vestiges of newspaper competition in Canada."

The call for action by both U.S. and Canadian authorities to halt "an unbroken march to control by a handful of corporate giants of one-newspaper towns from coast-to-coast" came from Charles Perlik, president of the Newspaper Guild; Joe Bingel, president of the International Typographical Union; Kenneth Brown, president of the Graphic Arts International Union, and Sol Fisko, president of the International Printing and Graphic Communications Union.

It followed announcements Wednesday that Southam was closing the Winnipeg Tribune and Thomson the Ottawa Journal, while Thomson's shares in both Vancouver's newspaper operations and the Montreal Gazette were sold to Southam, all in one day.

The four international union presidents called it a "media massacre," and said it is "the latest, most chilling, most outrageous step in an unbroken march to domination by newspaper chains in both countries."

They urged "intervention by governments, through new if not existing laws" to halt the spread of one-newspaper towns.

On Friday, a U.S. subsidiary of Toronto-based Thomson Newspapers, Thomson Newspaper Publishing Co. of Des Plaines, Ill., bought three daily newspapers and two weeklies from Panax Corp. of Detroit for a total purchase price of $21.5 million.

In Ottawa, federal anti-combines officials said Friday they are continuing an informal investigation into the newspaper closures but no results are expected until next week.

Fishermen like these in Sansum Narrows may some day sock it to salmon thanks to the persistent efforts of fisherman-author-moviemaker Charlie White, at right

Chinook, coho star in underwater epic

Charlie White is the Peeping Tom of the salmon fishing world.

He has seen Chester Chinook and Connie Coho doing their thing to a naked herring and caught the action on film.

Voyeurs up and down the coast have lined up to view it.

White is a fisherman, author, publisher and engineer-cum-biologist from Sidney. He has been showing his slick new film which is highlighted by intimate shots of salmon taken by his underwater camera.

The film is the focal point of White's many salmon fishing seminars in West Coast communities.

White has been shooting underwater film for seven years and each season attempts to delve deeper into what makes a salmon strike a lure. Or for that matter, what makes them turn away, as most salmon do.

So far he has some indications, but no definite answers and his only advice is to make sure hooks are sharp because many fish make only half-hearted swipes at the bait.

The camera, which is attached to a downrigger and placed behind the bait, can now be set to photograph two lures at the same time.

"The trouble we have had," he said, "is that if we placed the lures too far apart, one of them was out of camera range.

"If we placed them closer together, they tangled. Now we appear to have that problem solved."

The improvement allowed White to carry out different experiments this summer as he worked the waters off Vancouver Island in his nine-metre boat. He planned to place an artificial lure on one line and a natural bait on the other. He also hoped to compare large herring with small ones, slow-rolling herring with fast-rolling and scented lures with unscented ones.

Obtaining presentable film is painstaking. It is rare when the water is clear enough, the surface calm enough and the fish shallow enough. The camera can't function at lower than 21 metres.

"It has become incredibly expensive to make a film," White says. He hopes to recover part of the cost of his expeditions from the seminars.

White was born in Pennsylvania and received a civil engineering degree at the University of Oregon in Eugene. He subsequently had a change of heart on both matters.

"I've always said I was a Canadian born on the wrong side of the border," he said. "I loved the attitude and lifestyle of the people up here and, let's face it, I loved the fishing."

He came to Sidney 25 years ago after foresaking his engineering degree for a shot as a working biologist for the Oregon Fish Commission.

But his engineering education and his love of fishing came together when he built the Undersea Gardens in Victoria in 1963, which stripped away some of the mystique of life below the surface of the sea.

With the profits from that, he launched Saltaire Publishing Co., which has turned out a successful series of "How To" paperbacks, seven of them written by White. They have sold 400,000 copies, with How To Catch Salmon leading the list with 100,000 in sales.

"All my projects have initially been motivated by my curiosity," said White. "You've heard fishermen sitting around discussing how fish grab the bait.

"One guy would say the salmon slaps the herring with its tail to knock it out and then takes it. Ask him how he knows and he says his dad told him. I thought there must be some way to get down there and have a look."

The sight of a six-kilogram coho, mouth agape, bearing down upon a piece of herring strip is enough to interest any fisherman.

Russian navy? It does just about what it likes

By PAT DUFOUR

The Soviet Union's navy — subject of a massive buildup over the past 10 years — is in a position to interfere with or interdict all the world's vital shipping lanes, Rear-Admiral Michael Martin has warned.

Martin, who stepped down Thursday as commander maritime forces Pacific, said in an interview the Soviet Union's strong maritime presence allows it to control and change the destinies of developing countries.

"That's the power of maritime forces in peace time. You can project your presence and strength very easily," he said.

"It's the great flexibilty of maritime forces. You can remain in one place without being seen for long periods of time."

At the crucial moment, Martin says, military pressure can then be applied to either support governments or topple them, help revolutions and control the flow of vital arms and goods.

"You don't have to wage open war to win a position of strength," Martin says.

He said one of the best examples of this is Africa — particularly West Africa — where the Soviet presence is extremely strong.

The Soviet Union's marine forces in the Pacific are building steadily, both in surface ships and submarines, just as their navies are being beefed up in the Baltic, North and Black Seas.

While sovereignty of the Canadian Arctic must be guarded, Martin says this is already being done effectively by the Canadian Coast Guard.

"There is so little money in the defence budget that it is better to concentrate naval strength on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts where the main threat lies," he said.

Canada spends only two per cent of the gross national product on defence, the only North Atlantic Treaty Organization country spending less being Luxembourg.

Is this excusable?

Martin says it may be because the amount is decided by representatives of the people in a democratic vote.

"But that doesn't mean that it is right," Martin adds.

"Two per cent is very low for a country as rich as Canada and with the standing our country has in the western world."

Before the Royal Canadian Navy was formed, Canada relied on the Royal Navy for protection, paying $3 million a year for the service.

In latter years, the tendency has been to rely heavily on the U.S.

Martin says the U.S. has made it clear to its European allies that it expects them to carry more of the weight.

Drinking drivers hit Batvan roadblocks

For the second night in a row the Greater Victoria police Batvan was on the prowl in the western communities.

This time Colwood RCMP stopped about 400 vehicles at roadblocks set up on Admirals near Plumper Bay between 8.30 p.m. and 3.30 a.m.

Officers nabbed four motorists for impaired driving and charged another with refusing to provide a breath sample.

In addition one driver was given a 24-hour roadside suspension, one was charged with driving while his licence was under suspension, 17 were handed traffic violation tickets, 21 others got traffic notices, and two were caught driving without insurance, a minimum $250 fine.

And a passenger in one of the cars wound up charged with obstruction.

The unit is back on the road again tonight.

Two hurt in car smash

Two persons are in hospital, one in serious condition, after a car smashed into a rock bluff early today.

Police said the accident occurred at the north end of Shelbourne near the entrance to Churchill Drive.

The driver of the car, identified as Donald Corey McMillan, 24, of 3130 Kingsley, is listed in fairly good condition in Royal Jubilee with head and leg injuries.

His passenger, an 18-year-old girl, is in serious condition in the same hospital.

A hospital spokesman said she is being treated for neck, leg, rib and head injuries.

Her name has not been released pending notification of next of kin.

Police said the accident occurred about 2.50 a.m. An investigation is continuing.

It's drink for rich

Beer is plentiful in Victoria once again — but awfully expensive.

Trucks brought loads of Schlitz beer to liquor stores and hotels Friday after picket lines were withdrawn at court order from the main distribution point on the Lower Mainland.

But no Olympia beer is coming to Victoria.

This means the cheapest beer available in stores will be selling at $11.51 a dozen.

In hotels Schlitz sells at about $1.75 a bottle.

By contrast, Oly sells at $7.02 a dozen and $1.35 to $1.50 a bottle.

The expensive brew had been selling slowly in LDB stores as customers waited for cheaper beer to arrive.

"Schlitz? Boy, have we got Schlitz!" a spokesman at one liquor store said.

"And we're expecting another load of it but there's no Olympia coming to Victoria."

During the summer, he said, beer shipments to the capital region consisted of 80 per cent Olympia and 20 per cent Schlitz. Most other regions had to be content with 50-50.

"We've gone through our quota of Oly. I don't think there will be any more in Victoria for a full week. Plenty of Schlitz, though."

However, Vancouver got shipments of Oly Friday afternoon and customers lined up for it.

In Victoria, several local hotels are revising their earlier decisions to close their taverns by Sept. 1.

As along as some beer is available, regardless of how expensive it is, they will carry on.

In the labor dispute, pickets for four days had refused to obey a cease-and-desist order from the B.C. Labor Relations Board. That order was backed by another Thursday from the B.C. Supreme Court.

The pickets were lifted after John Langley, chief spokesman for the brewery workers, met with B.C. Federation of Labor president Jim Kinnaird who, Langley said, strongly suggested the workers stop illegal picketing.

Meanwhile, Bob Wallace, branch general manager, said Friday the branch is not going ahead immediately with contempt proceedings against the brewery workers.

However, the board will go to the LRB to seek damages from the union for costs incurred during the illegal picketing, he said.

B.C. has been short of beer since July 25 when the three largest breweries — Molson's, Labatt's and Carling O'Keefe — locked out their 900 employees over a contract dispute.

LDB oficial Joyce Courtney said a contempt action against the union was being reconsidered now that the pickets had been withdrawn.

But she said the branch is proceeding with a court action seeking damages from the union for the costs lost during the picketing.

Sewage worries divers

Scuba divers are becoming concerned about the health hazard posed by sea sewage off southern Vancouver Island, Victoria Medical Association president Paul Broome said today.

"They are worried about the viruses in the water. Some won't dive anywhere south of Sidney."

Broome said Victoria doctors believe the health hazard is growing, for those on land as well as in the sea.

"Unfortunately we can not document it. We do not have any way of measuring viruses in the water. Nor can we prove that related illnesses are on the increase, although we suspect they are."

Nurses have told the Times that salmonella and hepatitis, two diseases related to sanitation, have increased in Victoria city.

But figures from the Capital Region District do not demonstrate an area-wide increase.

Broome said doctors have felt frustrated by the lack of evidence to support their fears the danger to health is increasing.

"All we can show is that the coliform count is up, especially at Cordova Bay, and we know the number of viruses must be increasing. I guess we will need some kind of epidemic to bring the point home."

He said swimmers and scuba divers should be warned about the probable increase of viruses.

Many divers are already concerned and are driving to locations outside the Greater Victoria area before entering the water.

Broome said the VMA is proposing a three-step course of action:

—Stop using short outfalls. In particular, the region should scrap construction of the new McMicking Point short outfall and have Oak Bay sewage diverted to Clover Point.

—Use long outfall systems, as a short-term solution.

—Begin plans for a treatment plant, possibly at Work Point Barracks.

Broome said short outfalls create serious problems for Greater Victoria and should no longer be tolerated by the community.

Long outfalls are better since the sewage is carried out by tidal currents.

"Unfortunately the tide also comes in. We must recognize that long outfalls are not a long-term solution."

Constructing a treatment plant would be very expensive, Broome admitted, adding he has heard estimates as high as $60 million.

Broome said he is convinced the expenditure is well worth the investment because pollution will soon affect the total economy of the region as well as being a potential health hazard.

Fishing, boating, swimming and tourism could all be adversely affected.

Because of the long lead time required to complete a treatment plant, Broome urged the CRD to begin planning for it now.

'Tis the season for nostalgia . . .

Nostalgia hit us again when we saw the latest suit arrival in Eaton's Signature Shop . . . A magnificent suit from Dejac of Paris . . . Straight skirt, Chanel jacket . . . in a very soft wool-rayon-acrylic blend with a hand-woven texture . . . In teal interwoven with lilac and turquoise, it has a matching teal silk blouse with bowed neckline . . . Size 12, priced at $695 . . . Same suit in a size 14 is in cherry red tones . . . Some beautiful new Albert Nipon dresses are also on display in the Signature Shop . . . One is a rust crepe with wide tucks all down the front . . . double breasted with small buttons, and a little lace collar at the neck . . . $195 . . . Another is a polyester georgette cocktail drss . . . Wrap top which ties at the side . . . gathered shoulders and soft, full sleeves . . . Underneath, a georgette camisole top is attached to the separate slip . . . There's a raisin shade in size 12, and a lovely hyacinthe blue in size 14 . . . $195 . . . A darling dress by Soo Yung Lee is a deep lilac pure silk with splashes of turquoise and brown . . . Tiny frill around the neck and cuffs, and tie belt . . . Just two of these, sizes 8 and 14, priced at $195 . . . A new Kay Kerr V-neck pullover looks like mottled mohair . . . in browns and blues at $95 . . . and a pretty white cardigan in the same wool blend, same price at . . . Eaton's Signature Shop, 382-7141, loc. 242.

Give your kids a break this school year! . . .

The study season is upon us . . . and naturally a lot of people will be fixing up study centres . . . converting spare rooms into "offices" . . . doing what they can to make their offsprings' study periods pleasanter and more effective . . . At least we HOPE they will . . . because it's unbelievable the conditions some students have to study under . . . Rickety card tables, inefficient lighting and lack of privacy do little to ensure good grades . . . Give the kids a break and make studying easier for them . . . At Standard Furniture you'll find a large range of desks to choose from . . . Teak, mahogany, oak, ash, etc. . . . in different sizes and shapes . . . some are very reasonably priced indeed . . . There's also a good selection of bookcases and shelves for organizing study books and papers . . . A good range of lighting fixtures and lamps . . . the sort of lighting that won't strain young eyes . . . And a nice selection of chairs . . . desk chairs and comfortable easy chairs for those who have a lot of reading to do . . . As we said earlier . . . it really is important to have a proper place to study instead of the kitchen or dining room table . . . And grades really will improve if you make sure your children have such a well-equipped spot to hit the books in! . . . A good place to start looking for these things you need is . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

A rare selection of fashionable knits . . .

Knits of all kinds are big fashion news for fall . . . and while we've been seeing some mighty smart knits in most of the nice dress shops we report on . . . we've yet to see as many . . . and in such a wide price range . . . as the new fall knits at Lady Mary Anne Fashions! . . . They've literally something for every woman! . . . Saw some super 2-pce. washable acrylic knit dresses . . . sweater tops and lined skirts . . . The sort of dresses you can wear with aplomb on any occasion with the judicious use of accessories . . . One of the colored or expandable gold belts at Lady Mary Anne would add a lot of pizazz . . . Only $75 . . . And $65 for some equally pretty boucle knits (a black one with V neck would make a darling little dinner or theatre dress!) . . . Other one-piecers at $70 come in teal, or burgandy . . . Higher on the price scale are the inimitable Trish Pallas knits at $280 . . . and a new line with the Pickfair label . . . hand-loomed and hand-crocheted with buttons dipped in gold . . . Several nice styles in these . . . One we like has mink colored skirt and bone V-neck sweater top . . . gold buttons . . . $325 . . . A Mario Romano 100% wool knit dress has V neck and pleated skirt with stretchy waistband . . . Beige with brown trim and red with grey, at $190 . . . Petites from 6 to 16 . . . regular sizes 6 to 24 at . . . Lady Mary Anne Fashions, 706 Fort St., 383-7552.

Consider these great cruises! . . .

Most exciting travel brochure we've read in many a day is that describing all the Sitmar cruises for 1981 . . . a copy of which Paulin's gave us this week . . . and which we heartily recommend you ask them for if the thought of a 1981 cruise has even crossed your mind! . . . These upcoming cruises aboard the Fairwind and the Fairsea . . . two of the most luxurious cruise ships afloat . . . are simply tremendous . . . They take in Caribbean cruises from 7 to 14 days out of Fort Lauderdale . . . Trans-Panama sailings . . . 14 days from Los Angeles to San Juan and vice versa . . . Acapulco to Ft. Lauderdale and vice versa . . . And Mexican Riviera cruises from 7 to 11 days from L.A. . . . In Oct. and Nov. 1981 there'll be special 11-day cruises through the Panama Canal, continuing on to the San Blas Islands, Cancun on the Yucatan Peninsula, and Haiti and Cartagena . . . Prices vary according to type of accomodation, destination and length of cruise, but it's all set out in the brochure . . . as well as the various add-ons which will allow air fare, depending on the cruise you choose . . . So best get a brochure from Paulin's . . . Incidentally, Paulin's have had a lot of enquiries re the Holland American Line cruises we told you about last time, and already have several Victoria bookings . . . If booked by the end of October Canadian money will be accepted at par, and there'll be discounts on air fare! Great travel bargains! . . . Paulin Travel, 532 Broughton St., 382-8168.

By RENA PAUL

Dear Rena:

I am amazed at all the products for men at the cosmetic counters. What is happening to the "male image" as we once knew it?

Jane H.

Dear Jane:

Men's cosmetics represents big business. No longer are we locked into the old image of what is male and what is female. We are all people and we all have health and beauty needs. It is only that women have a head start. The better educated and more informed members of society see this trend as yet an extension of the liberated person. We are becoming more individual and less inhibited in dealing with solutions to common problems: "The male image" is becoming more refined and expert in that we realize our society is composed of many professional services designed and developed to cater to our needs. Surely the use of cosmetics by men will indicate his wisdom in utilizing the advantages offered by society. In time, no doubt we will see the basics like cleansers, toners, and moisturizers now in use be followed by an acceptance of colors and accents to enhance the male image.

Dear Rena:

I am 26, and a brunette — thanks to my hairdresser. Without her I would be as grey as my grandmother, whose hair was white by the time she reached 30. Now I have a little girl and wonder if you could suggest something I might do to prevent her from going grey at an early age.

Sybil U.

Dear Sybil:

The tendency to turn grey at an early age may run in families, but there is only a 50 per cent chance that your daughter inherited it. After all, she did get fifty per cent of her genes from her father. Do you know what age his family went grey? I can understand you concern and wish I could be of help. Unfortunately no medication or treatment has yet been found to stop hair from losing its pigment. But scientists are working on it! Perhaps by the time your daughter reaches her teens, there may be a solution. Write me again at that time and we may have some answers.

Dear Rena:

Dear Doris:

Bulky knits and styles can be worn quite well by the small busted woman of average or taller height. The shorter figure should avoid the more bulky sweater. The illusion of a larger bustline can be achieved by handknits, cables, novelty patterns and loopy chenilles. Sweater sets, blouson styles, gathered and padded shoulders that add bulk to the figure are suggested; avoid styles and knits that cling. Colors that are light and bright are best.

Theresa stamp

The Indian government has issued a commemorative stamp bearing the likeness of Mother Theresa in honor of the Nobel Peace Prize winner's 70th birthday.

But it was business as usual this week at Mother Theresa's convent in Calcutta.

"We do not celebrate birthdays," a nun at the convent said. "There were only prayers for her during the day's routine mass."

Girls fined for ducking housekeeping classes

BIENNE, Switzerland (UPI) — Seven schoolgirls who say domestic housekeeping classes are sexist have been fined for refusing to attend them.

The girls, in their late teens, have been boycotting the classes for the past year, claiming they are "sexist and discriminatory."

Switzerland's Women's Liberation Association, the Socialist Party and other groups supported the girls in their campaign.

In March a local magistrate fined each of the girls $54 for refusing to attend the classes, which are obligatory under local state laws.

The girls appealed but Francois Rider, of the local court's third chamber, upheld the earlier fines and also ordered each girl to pay an additional $60 in costs.

Lawyers for the girls said there may be another appeal to a higher court "but in light of the cost of such proceedings we may decide to pay up."

Hypnosis can hold the magic formula

By L.L. COLEMAN, MD

Dear Doctor:

I have two big problems. The first is that I've gained almost 45 pounds in the last year. The second is that I can't fall asleep. I'm up half the night, worrying and eating. I was told that hypnosis would help me, but I'm scared of the idea. I would like to try it, but I want to be sure it's safe. — Mrs. L.F., N.J.

Dear Mrs. F.:

It is almost a quarter of a century since hypnosis and hypnotherapy were given the stamp of approval by the American Medical Association. That approval, of course, was given to doctors, psychologists and dentists who are specially trained and certified in the art and science of hypnosis.

Today hypnosis is accepted as an important addition to other forms of treatment and is used extensively with successful results. Its great popularity for the control of insomnia, the control of weight and for the elimination of smoking has overshadowed its significance in many other problems in medicine and psychology.

For example, hypnosis is a recommended form of treatment for the control of pain which has not been modified by conventional drugs and other therapeutic techniques. It is a potent weapon in the control of fears, headaches and phobias, and also has been tried with success in cases of alcoholism and to alleviate uncontrolled tensions and anger.

Many cases have been reported of general surgery and painful dental procedures accomplished without anesthesia while the patient was under deep hypnosis. The total absence of pain reflects the efficacy of this form of preparation.

Many people are afraid of hypnosis. Their fear revolves around the fact that they will lose control of themselves and might not be responsible for behavior. This fear is probably based on the experiences so many people have had when they witnessed hypnosis being used as a parlor game. In so many instances, the willing and unwilling subjects, hypnotized by entertainers and "stage hypnotists" (without licence or training), have been humiliated for the purpose of amusing the audience.

This is not the kind of hypnosis to which I have been referring. You can be assured that the cooperative venture between you and a trained hypnotherapist will be a totally different experience. At no time will you be subjected to expressing anything that you might later regret. Under hypnosis you will not vary from your own morality or from attitudes that are present in your waking state.

You are geographically close to the Morton Prince Centre for Hypnotherapy in New York City. It's Director, Dr. Milton V. Kline, a distinguished psychologist, is in charge of a large group of trained personnel, all of whom are capable of handling the problems you describe.

'Jet set' adopts an ancient herb

by helen chesnut

On several occasions I have expressed my fondness of herbs and their culture and it is an especially interesting branch of this gardening hobby because of the fascinating varieties which can be tried out. And it seems there's always a new candidate turning up that you haven't known much if anything about before.

Now I notice that according to the New York Times one herb in particular has just recently become the darling of trendy gourmets in New York and Paris. This 'jet set' herb is sorrel, a nutty-lemony green used in soups, sauces and salads.

Regarded as a weed by some, sorrel was once a Canadian delicacy, used as an additive to salmon roe in the making of Indian caviar. It just goes to show that you don't have to be a super-sophisticate to be a trend-setter.

As a matter of fact, it's a curious thing how these food fads go. For example, a vegetable like leeks, once considered a vegetable only for the very poor and disadvantaged, these days is presented in the best French and New York restaurants a la vinaigrette as an expensive hors d'oeuvre.

I plan to re-introduce sorrel into my herb garden this year, having left my plants at a previous home some years ago. I remember with fondness its lemony acid tang — a delightful addition to salads, soups and cooked greens. Just a nice chew on a leaf of sorrel as you pass through the garden is a pleasant taste treat and diversion from the task at hand.

Sorrel is among the oldest of herbs. In the 18th century it had quite a reputation of its medicinal qualities. One diarist wrote of sorrel: "Sorrel sharpens the appetite, assuages heat, cools the liver and strengthens the heart."

According to one observer of the times, salad lovers 200 years ago felt that sorrel imparted "so grateful a quickness to the salad that it should never be left out." Its slightly acid taste both stimulates the appetite and adds zest to insipid tasting-foods.

Sorrel has been prized since Greek and Roman times as a general body cleanser. A surviving Tudor household book recommends sorrel water as a blood cleanser to improve complexions. Pliny noted that sorrel rendered meat more pleasant and light of digestion. The Romans chewed the leaves to prevent thirst.

Gerard, the herbalist, wrote: "The leaves of Sorrel taken in good quantitie, stamped and strained into some ale, and a posset made thereof, coole the sicke body, quench thrist, and allay the heate of such as are troubled with a pestilent fever, hot ague, or any great inflatmmation within."

Most of us, however, will leave such matters up to our doctor or pharmacist but for modern gastronomical purposes, the broad-leaved French sorrel is the one most used. The leaves are slightly arrow shaped and succulent. This sorrel makes a slender, perennial plant about two feet (60 cm) high with juicy stems and leaves and reddish green flowers.

Sorrel can be grown from seed, or from root divisions. It is best planted in a sheltered spot in a light, rich soil with compost. It can be placed in full sun or light shade. If left to go to seed the plant's leaves will become tough, so the flowering plants should be cut back.

Apartment dwellers will be pleased to know that this herb can be grown indoors along with many other herbs. It's a good idea, though, to give it a feed once in a while with a fertilizer for acit-loving houseplants.

And sorrel leaves cna be dried like any other herbs. But do be sure to store them air-tight in a dark place that is cool in order to preserve their distinctive flavor and color.

Sorrel is most famous in French sorrel soup, a national favorite. Cooks two centureis ago wrapped sorrel leaves around tough meat when cooking to tenderize the meat. Sorrel leaves, beaten to a pulp and mixed with sugar and vinegar, were served like apple sauce with meats and fish.

However, today the delicious lemon-flavored young leaves are most used mixed with other greens in salads or mixed with lettuce and blended into a cream soup.

Tigers in danger

KUALA LUMPUR (AP) — The number of surviving Malaysian tigers has dropped to dangerously low levels and the subspecies may soon be extinct unless efforts are made to preserve its natural surroundings, conservationists say.

Belt-less policeman charged

SASKATOON, Sask. (CP) — City police have charged one of their own with failing to wear a seat-belt while riding in an automobile — almost three months after a motorist told the department that he saw an officer not wearing it.

The officer, Robert Peters, has three weeks to decide whether he will pay a $20 fine or go to court.

It all began when Joe Butzelaar of Saskatoon saw one of the two policemen in a police cruiser not wearing a seat-belt and followed the cruiser for some distance.

When the cruiser stopped, he demanded that a ticket be made out to the officer not wearing the seat-belt. He was told to talk to the inspector at police headquarters. He did.

"It's just a matter of principle," Butzelaar said Thursday after learning that the officer was charged.

The Families starting out in Music lessons this fall but have not yet a suitable instrument like Piano or Organ, we recommend the Piano Accordion.

The Student is taught to read Piano music and learns to play melody and rhythm at the same time. The accordion is portable and therefore can be practised anywhere. In a short time children learn interesting songs, which is self encouraging.

We rent accordions to our students for only $8.00 per month, and the rental applies to purchase.

It's a small investment to discover a musician in your family.

P.S. Our present students should phone very soon to confirm their lesson time for the 1980-81 season.

French out in Man. court

WINNIPEG (CP) — A provincial court judge dealt a blow to French language rights in Manitoba Friday when he ruled the province's statutes need not be written in French as well as English.

Judge Harold Gyles dismissed a motion charging that English-only speeding tickets and the Manitoba statutes on which they are based are invalid until rewritten in the French language as required by the Manitoba Act of 1870.

The chief judge said the language rights guaranteed by Section 133 of the British North America Act, which says both languages may be used in Parliament, Quebec courts and both houses of the Quebec legislature, could not be amended by the Manitoba Act.

The matter was brought by Roger Bilodeau, a Moncton University law student from St. Agathe, Man.

Bilodeau, who was issued a speeding ticket in Winnipeg May 13, said the summons was invalid because the province had failed to make French a language of record for legal prodeedings as required by Section 23 of the Manitoba Act.

Immediately following the judgement, Bilodeau's lawyer, Vaughan Baird, announced he would appeal the ruling.

"We are appealing immediately on the grounds he (the judge) has not realized that Section 23 is a Gibralter of our constitution in Manitoba which provides that the acts shall be in both the English and French languages," Baird said in an interview outside the court.

"I am shocked to think that he would disregard Section 23 of our act."

Senior Crown counsel, Wayne Myshkowsky, said he felt relieved about of the ruling. "To rule otherwise would have invalidated all provincial laws."

The Bilodeau case follows a Supreme Court ruling earlier this year which reinstated French as an official language in Manitoba after a 90-year hiatus.

Since that ruling, the Manitoba government has begun translating all provincial statutes into French, but has not brought French into all areas of its jurisdiction.

Trudeau invited to Alberta party

OTTAWA (CP) — A tiff with Alberta over Prime Minister Trudeau's participation in the province's 75th anniversary celebrations on the long weekend had a happy ending Friday.

Premier Peter Lougheed invited Trudeau to be present at a splashy Monday ceremony on the front lawn of the Alberta legislature to mark the 75th anniversary of the province's entry into Confederation.

And Trudeau accepted "with delight," as one aide put it.

Until Friday afternoon when the invitation was issued, Alberta officials had been telling Trudeau staffers the prime minister had replied to their informal invitation to the gala morning affair — issued earlier this summer — too late to be included.

Although the prime minister's office received the invitation to another event five days ago, it still hadn't been accepted at noon Friday. Trudeau was holding out for an invitation to be included in the morning event as well.

He got what he wanted a few hours later.

"I think it's been blown out of proportion," said a Lougheed spokesman in Edmonton.

Critics call for action on economy

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition critics called on the government Friday to revive the economy rather than tinker with the constitution after Statistics Canada reported the economy's worst quarterly performance in nearly 20 years.

Preliminary estimates from the agency show the production of goods and services, also known as gross national product, declined 1.1 per cent, excluding inflation, to $128.3 billion in the second quarter from the first three months of 1980.

John Crosbie, Progressive Conservative finance critic, said in a telephone interview from Newfoundland the figures "further support the fact that we should have had a budget in May or June."

"The first order of business if Parliament is called back before October is to bring in a budget. (Justice Minister Jean) Chretien should stop beating his chest like Alley Oop about the constitution," Crosbie argued.

He said the government should spell out its economic plan for the next two or three years in the budget but added that no stimulus is needed because of the size of its predicted $14.1-billion deficit for this fiscal year.

Ian Deans, New Democratic Party industry critic, demanded the government put economics ahead of the constitution and called for an immediate recall of Parliament to bring in a budget.

However, it should be expansionary, he said. "We need a tax cut for middle- and low-income Canadians."

Despite the gloomy economic news, forecasters see some bright spots on the horizon.

While the second-quarter results were a little worse than expected, John Grant, chief economist for the Toronto investment firm Wood Gundy Ltd., says the third quarter will show some improvements.

He predicted, however, the year will show an overall decline in the production of goods and services.

George Saba, chief economist for the Montreal investment firm Greenshields Ltd., agrees.

"We expected the second quarter to be the worst of all. In the third quarter, there will be some movement out of the recession as the U.S. improves."

A record 4.6-per-cent increase announced Friday in the U.S. government's index of economic indicators in July seems to bear out President Carter's prediction the recession there will end shortly.

As well, a mid-summer start on construction of the Canadian portion of the Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline project will help boost capital spending by business, the one source of strength in the economy.

Federal energy ad effort aimed to derail issue

TORONTO (CP) — A leaked document shows that a federal energy advertising campaign is aimed at diverting public attention from energy as a major national issue, according to The Globe and Mail.

The newspaper says the document, prepared earlier this year by Donald Hanright, director-general of the communications branch of the federal energy department, shows the campaign is also aimed at catching detractors of federal energy policy by surprise and allowing the government to gain control of the energy debate.

The detractors are identified in the document as the petroleum-producing provinces, foreign-owned multinational oil companies, the political opposition and the media, The Globe says.

The document says the campaign should also include radio and television commercials, magazine advertisements, mailed leaflets and shopping mall displays.

The newspaper quotes the document as saying it should be possible to eliminate energy as a major national issue.

On Wednesday, Hanright confirmed the authenticity of the document in a CBC radio interview. He said in the interview that he wrote the document, but parts of it had been rejected by his superiors, and the price tag of the campaign had been pared to $4 million from estimate of $11 million.

One of the first in the series of ads, which began appearing in newspapers in early August, says that Canadians "have what it takes to achieve their own energy goals."

Prison like resort?

A lawyer Friday said the William Head medium-security prison resembled a resort when she drove by it.

Suzanne Paterson, who recently came to Victoria from Vancouver, made the comment in Victoria provincial court after entering guilty pleas on behalf of two inmates who went missing from the prison July 23.

Stephen John Thomas Johnson, 23, of Edmonton, and Gary Alan Smith, 22, of 614 Esquimalt Road, pleaded guilty to being unlawfully at large and received consecutive jail terms of seven and four months.

Judge Harold Alder imposed the heavier sentence on Johnson because of a 1979 conviction for escaping from Fort Saskatchewan prison in Alberta.

Raymond Edward Killen, who is also charged with escape and being unlawfully at large, elected trial by judge and jury and was remanded to Wednesday for a preliminary hearing date.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Johnson and Smith were missed during an early-morning bed check.

Guards discovered that dummies had been placed in their beds and prison officials also discovered the escapers made their getaway by using a piece of the wharf to float to freedom.

The two men were caught a few days later after Victoria police were called to Coffee Mac's, 617 Gorge Road East, concerning a disturbance at the restaurant.

Johnson was serving a three-year term to expire Aug. 19, 1982, for dangerous driving, driving while suspended, taking an auto without the owner's consent and breaking and entering.

Smith was serving three years for three counts of breaking and entering and was not due for release until July 18, 1982.

Paterson said the men had been sitting on the prison's beach on the day of their escape and saw people "having fun" on Weir's Beach, which is adjacent to the prison.

She added that sometimes boaters from Weir's Beach came as close as three metres and taunted the prisoners.

Johnson and Smith were drinking homebrew alcohol and decided to escape.

They ended up in Victoria, she said, met some friends and got drunk again.

By ISAAC WILLIAMS

I was about to break the law! There I was, armed with cassette deck and blank tape, about to make a bootleg recording, about to betray the very industry that pays my rent. Record companies say that pirate taping is destroying their business and I was ready to chip out a little piece for myself. A headline flashed in my mind: RECORD CRITIC IN BOOTLEG BUST — the irony of it all. I eased my conscience with the thought that it wasn't for personal gain but for my readers that I was risking career and liberty.

I was after "The Big Scoop." I had a chance to preview the new Doug and The Slugs album Cognac And Bologna and nothing was going to stop me.

Somewhere in the backwoods, far from probing eyes, was a small recording studio which had a tape of the new Slug's record. To add to the scenario, this particular tape was Hot; snatched a few weeks earlier from its righful owners who undoubtably had people out looking for it. This tape was intended for record company ears only; how could I resist? I plugged my recorder into the soundboard and stood back to listen to the most anticipated album of the year.

What I heard, and have been subsequently playing nonstop for the past week, was worth any risk I had to take. Sure I'm biased; I was prepared to like the album no matter what but I wasn't ready for it. I want to take back all the superlatives I have used in the past few months and pile them right on Cognac And Bologna. This is not only the best Canadian album of the year, not just the best album of the year, but the next step in the evolution of rock music!

You scoff? Wait till you hear the album then. What Doug and the Slugs have done in less than forty minutes is reunite musicianship with new wave energy. Until now there has been two strongly opposed factions in music; energy, economy and audience entertainment versus technical expertise and professionalism. This album destroys the argument that the two camps can not be combined.

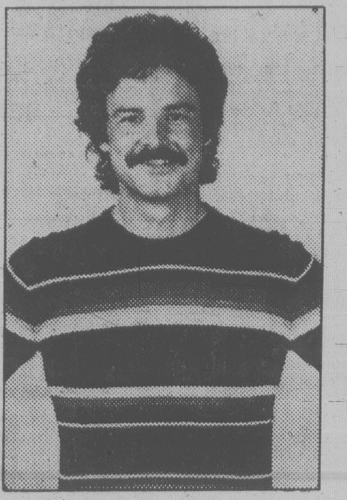
Whether you like The Clash or Pablo Cruise you will love this record. The Slugs know how to play some hot licks and they never lose control, a very tight band. They convincingly try just about every musical style and like good Italian chefs spice up their songs. A touch of reggae on Refugee, bit of Duane Eddy guitar on To Be Laughing, some early 60's Freddy Cannon organ on Just Another Case, doo-wop on the sightly altered version of Too Bad, rockabilly piano on Chinatown Calculations, all there in small doses. Eleven varied and great songs that add up to one fantastic platter.

Doug and the Slugs have a lot more songs up their sleeves, in fact they could have released a double album. Their live set is full of great material that doesn't appear on this debut. If ever a band had a case for a live album these guys do, I just hope somebody is recording their concerts.

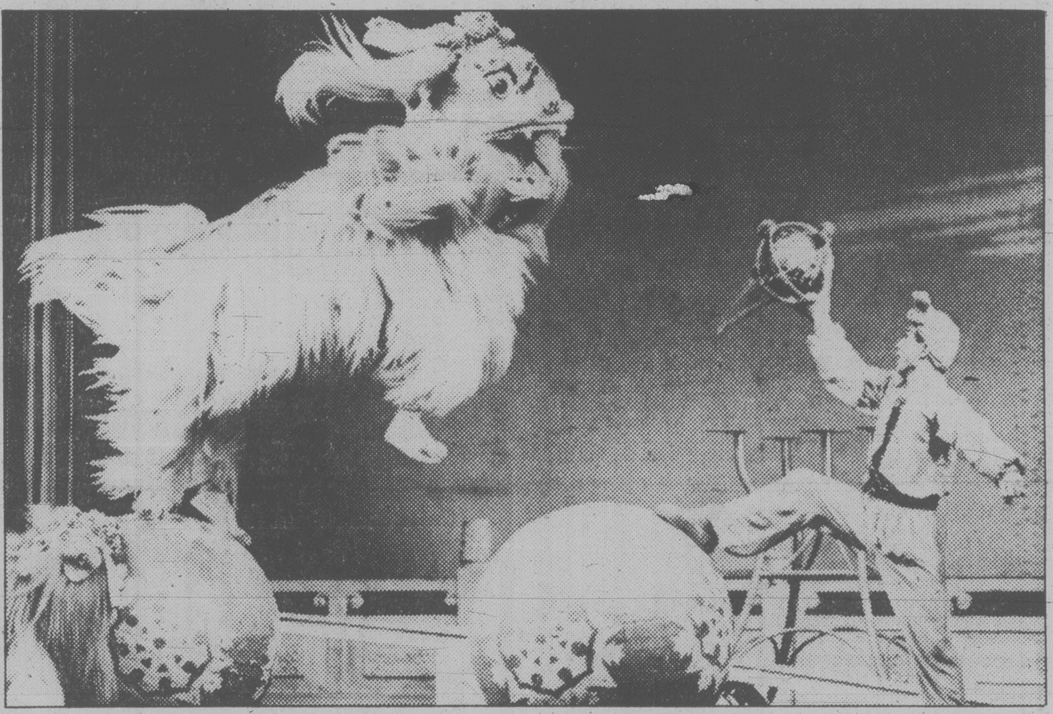
What more can I add? Soon the airwaves will be chock-full of Cognac And Bologna. Doug and the Slugs are going to put Canada on the musical map.

A sizzling Indian summer!

By AUDREY JOHNSON



Victoria's Indian summer in the arts and entertainment offers a sizzling selection of talent. At top left, Glynnis Leyshon will be back in town as stage director for the Pacific Opera Association's production of The Barber of Seville*; in the centre, Burton Cummings gets things rolling with his show Sept. 2, at the Memorial Arena; right, Ann Mortifee will be in town Sept. 7, singing beautiful ballads at the McPherson; below, the dazzling troupe of Acrobats from Canton commence their first Canadian tour in Victoria at the Royal (Sept. 4-6).*



Someone who recently came to Victoria from that remote area of Canada east of the Rocky Mountains, mentioned that he'd been told by friends, "you won't like it for long. It's beautiful but dull; there's nothing to do."

He's been here three months and so far, he says, he's been busier enjoying the goodies than a fly around a barrel of molasses!

To a certain extent one's view of entertainment in Victoria would depend on what you like to do.

Victoria does not get the big glossy stage shows that hit Vancouver. But that's mainly because we don't have a suitable facility to house them. Mainland impressarios have been telling us for years that we could get many of the events if something was done about the Royal Theatre.

But that's a rusty wheel so let's pass on.

Let's look instead at the fall and early winter Victoria scene, while still savoring a very 'alive' summer.

Flip the calendar pages to September-October and let's see what's cooking. A quick survey suggests this will be the hottest fall on record — a sizzling Indian summer in the arts and entertainment.

There is no familiar first-half-of-September hiatus. The action begins the moment Labor Day is over with Canadian rock star Burton Cummings at Memorial Arena. The former focal point of the Guess Who, Juno Award winner in 1976, with LPs soaring past double platinum, performs a single concert Sept. 2.

The week also includes a four-day run of the successful Victoria Theatre Guild comedy, Once a Catholic, at McPherson Playhouse (Sept. 3-6), the return to the Playhouse of Charles Hofmann with noon programs of silent films (Fridays starting Sept. 5).

The dazzling troupe of Acrobats from Canton commence their first Canadian tour in Victoria at the Royal (Sept. 4-6).

Concerts at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria offer, on Thursday, pianists Jane Davis and Philip Tillotson in a program of works for piano, four hands; Sept. 18, guitarist Michael Strutt; Sept. 25, Conservatory of Music senior staff pianist, Gilbert Munroe, and Sept. 28, the Ars Nova Ensemble.

Bracketing the end of the first and beginning of the second September week is a special event for creative ballad lovers — the return to the McPherson Sept. 7 of Ann Mortifee.

The month also provides us with two major music-theatre events: the Vancouver City Stage production of the Black Arts Theatre internationally lauded play with its musical and dance interpolations, For Colared Girls, (Sept. 9-13) and our own Pacific Opera Association's professional production of the joyous Rossini comic opera, The Barber of Seville. (Sept. 17, 19, 20 and 22).

About the latter, there is something particularly satisfactory to be found in the prominent presence of Victorians and former Victorians: music director-conductor Timothy Vernon, stage director Glynis Leyshon, principal tenor Richard Margison, baritone John Dunbar, sopranos Elizabeth Taylor and Erika Kurth and lighting designer Cameron More.

On the University of Victoria campus, the School of Music has scheduled a program of works by Beethoven and Schubert entitled The Viennese Classicists for Sept.21, and a new member of the faculty, pianist Bruce Vogt will be introduced in a recital program Sept. 26.

Friday's free noon time 50-minute recitals begin also on Sept.26.

Victoria Theatre Guild, in addition to its McPherson re-run, will have the Alan Aykbourne comedy, Ten Times Table, in a nine-day stay at the Langham Court Theatre starting Sept. 25.

And for the children there will be an event of their own when Four Seasons Musical Theatre starts Saturday performances of Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp Sept. 20.

But wait, we're not finished with the month yet; the biggest and most eclectic event is yet to be mentioned; the CBC Festival Victoria in its second edition.

In conjunction with CBC, the McPherson Foundation and UVic present 12 events plus six noon concerts at the McPherson and University Centre. The opening fanfare on Sep.24 will have Timothy Vernon conducting the Victoria Symphony Orchestra at the Mac with guest artist, harpist Erica Goodman.

The next evening it will be recording star Shari Ulrich with the Claire Lawrence Band, and the next, Viva Victoria! a music, comedy and dance show starring Joani and Jim Taylor and a 10-piece band performing pop, rock, jazz and country.

At University Centre, Sept.27, Nexus, six internationally acclaimed virtuoso percussionists will be performing.

A complete change of pace follows with the Festival presentation of the oratorio, Cain, by early Canadian composer Alexis Contant. Performing the 75th anniversary premiere will be the Victoria Symphony Orchestra conducted by Paul Freeman with the Amity Singers and Vancouver Cantata Singers and soloists Pierre Charbonneau, Rosemarie Landry, Bruce Pullan, Donald Collins and Jennifer Jestley. (Sept. 28).

Other Festival events are Front Page Challenge (McPherson Sept. 29), Vancouver Masterpiece Trio (Sept. 30), Powder Blues Band (Oct. 1), Fred Penner in two shows for children (Oct. 2 and 3), guitarist Amos Garrett (Oct. 2) and Dr. Bundolo at University Centre (Oct. 4).

The Festival series of free noon concerts at McPherson schedules an Erica Goodman harp recital (Sept. 25); Rosemarie Landry and Pierre Charbonneau with Jane Coop at the piano (Sept. 26); the Bill Sample Trio with vocalist Barbara Fisher (Sept. 30); Robin Wood and Sydney Humphreys (Oct. 1); Jane Coop (Oct. 2) and Tim Williams in a country and western program Oct. 3.

Brochures giving full details can be picked up at the McPherson. The Foundation is also hosting, in the midst of all this, the annual White Heather Concert which comes all the way from Bonnie Scotland to heat the Gaelic blood in local veins. It's here Sept. 27 and Oct. 1.

Something for everyone indeed!

Then we come to October and that month already promises to be equally bulging with entertainment options. If September is light anywhere it's in theatre but October compensates with choices that include Bastion's season opener, The Miracle Worker, and The Belfry's comedy thriller, I'll Be Back Before Midnight. Arts Club Theatre of Vancouver brings Coward's Private Lives to the McPherson Oct. 30 as part of a four-part package-deal theatre series.

A company delineated in the Mac brochure as the 'Chinese Opera of Hong Kong' will be at the Playhouse Oct. 3 and 4, Canadian Brass Oct. 7, and the Irish folk group, Clannad, Oct. 13.

Spectrum Ballet Canada will be back in the McPherson Oct. 31 and Nov. 1 with a program of all new works.

Victoria Symphony Orchestra launches its 39th season Oct. 5-6 at the Royal and will occupy every Sunday in October, two with Master Series programs featuring guests Yarbrough and Cowan, duo pianists, and Louis Lorte, pianist; and two pops concerts — with Mitch Miller Oct. 12, and a Gerhwin spectacular with guest artists and Freeman Oct. 26.

UVic will have a busy music month highlighted by the visit of Ray Still, principal oboist with the Chicago Symphony. Besides a lecture and workshops for students and teachers, Still is to be presented in concert with faculty oboist William Benjamin and the UVic Little Orchestra conducted by George Corwin, Oct. 25. The program will feature two baroque concerti for two oboes and strings.

In addition there will be a faculty recital Oct. 10 presenting flautist Lanny Pollet and harpist Kathryn Ely in the recital hall, and two ensemble performances: UVic Orchestra with Corwin featuring the Brahms Symphony No. 1 (Oct. 17), and UVic Wind Symphony conducted by Jesse Read (Oct. 24). Both in the University Centre and free.

Looking ahead past this bright Indian summer, the early winter months are promising although full information is not available concerning incoming events and some local organizations have yet to announce their intentions.

Aside from the regular VSS and theatre organizations there will be other stage shows and musical events from the Conservatory of Music, the University Theatre Department, Musical Art Society, Victoria Operatic Society and others.

Oh yes, and Ain't Misbehavin', the hit jazz musical stage show of last season will pay a return visit Oct. 9 and 10.

And here's something for chamber music buffs to lick their lips over: UVic has the Orford String Quartet coming in November and the Guarneri String Quartet in March.

Dull in Victoria? You'd have to be hard to please to find it so.

Weatherman Percy Saltzman has been signed by the Global network and will be returning to television after an absence of seven years. Saltzman had entertained and informed audiences for 20 years on the CBC's evening news programs, and always concluded his weather report by tossing his piece of chalk into the air.

Barbi Benton always wondered why her millionaire husband, George Gradow, bought their enormous Pasadena, Calif., estate while he still was single, but she never dreamed it was to eliminate unfavorable competition. When she finally asked, he answered, "I used to be the ugliest guy on the block. Now I'm the only guy on the block." It almost beats plastic surgery.

Anne Murray has been getting flowers regularly from actor Burt Reynolds, but her husband Bill Langstroth is taking it in stride. A spokesman for Ms. Murray said he doesn't know if Reynolds is romantically interested in Canada's songbird. "Reynolds hasn't said anything directly, but he's certainly making his presence known."

Erma Bombeck, the harried homemaker who ventilates her frustrations via best-selling, often hilarious books and conversations with herself on morning television, is branching out. The new forum for her material is going to be the Broadway stage. Bombeck's latest best-seller, Aunt Erma's Cope-book, is the basis of Susan Silver's new comedy "Erma," which is expected to open on Broadway in the spring. The character of Erma herself has not yet been cast, but Bea Arthur, star of the television series Maude, is said to be a likely candidate.

Barbi Benton — 'ugly guy, but smart'

Actor Bruce Dern says an acting career is like long-distance running. "Building a career is a matter of endurance. You've got to keep yourself in training and wait for the opportunity to go the distance." Dern should know — not only does he run every morning, but he worked in show business for 24 years before getting an Academy Award nomination for his part in the film Coming Home.

Alvin "Junior" Samples — Hee Haw's 5-foot-6 inch, 300-pound country bumpkin — isn't as dumb as he looks, but he doesn't want that bruited about. Says he, "It's my image. A rumor got started years ago that I couldn't read or write. When anybody asks, I tell them I can read well enough to know the amount of my paycheck and write well enough to endorse it at the bank." And he adds, "I'd rather be wise and act dumb than be dumb and act wise."

Seymour, of Battlestar Galactica, takes on her toughest role

Jane Seymour stars as Steinbeck's Kate

By MIKE CLARK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kate murdered her parents, turned to prostitution and then perversion, shot her husband, walked away from her wedlock-born twins, and died an arthritis-crippled paranoid. Jane Seymour will attempt to portray Kate as a human being.

Kate is the riveting female lead in John Steinbeck's epic East of Eden, which will be shown in seven blood-curdling hours this fall on ABC.

The character will be played by Miss Seymour, a stunning Englishwoman who strives against all odds "to make her vulnerable enough that the audience would actually care about what she did."

Early in life, Kate focused on the world with a troubled mind. As a teenager, she killed her parents by setting fire to their house, then ran away and became a prostitute. Nearly beaten to death by her pimp, she is rescued by Adam and quickly gets him to marry her.

That plan goes awry when she becomes pregnant by Adam's brother, Charles. She tries unsuccessfully to kill her unborn children, then breaks away from the family by shooting Adam.

She returns to prostitution, murders her madam, takes over the house and turns it into a den of a sexual depravity. In the end, the monster in her has squelched every human trait, and pushes her to suicide.

Miss Seymour, mostly unknown in North America despite a glittering list of credits, looks on Kate as "the best piece of work I've ever done in my life. To play a character that is so many different people, and also not even human, is fantastic."

Among the other stars of the $10 million project are Timothy Bottoms as Adam, Bruce Boxleitner as Charles, Lloyd Bridges as Samuel Hamilton and Sam Bottoms as Cal, one of Kate's twin sons.

Shooting was crammed into a 78-day schedule on location in Savannah, Ga., Los Angeles and the Steinbeck Country near Salinas, Calif.

The segments were shot mostly in sequence, which meant that for several weeks Miss Seymour had to portray a dying Kate.

This year, in addition to Kate, she plays a beautiful turn-of-the-century actress opposite Christopher Reeve in Somewhere In Time and the unsuspecting straight guy for Benjie in Oh, Heavenly Dog. In past years, she has ranged from Shakespeare to Battlestar Gallactica, from a pioneer women in The Awakening Land to an alcoholic dress designer in Seventh Avenue.

"The point is, no one has actually categorized me. It's the best thing that can happen to an actor, but it's the worst thing that can happen to someone who wants to be a star."

Jane Seymour is a one-time ballet dancer who was forced to give up because of cartilage damage in her knees.

Academy Award-winner Maggie Smith took the frustrated dancer aside one day and mentioned the possibility of an acting career. "She was the one who sewed the seed," Miss Seymour said.

After years of playing anything she could find in England, Miss Seymour abandoned her native shores for the jungle of Hollywood.

"I came to America with no job, no work permit, no agent. It was pretty crazy the first six weeks or so, and then I started being offered really good work."

The sound of Mancini is the sound of music

By LEONARD FEATHER
Los Angeles Times

His sound is still everywhere. Two weeks ago Henry Mancini's "Campaign '80" theme was racking up ASCAP credits for him on NBC during the Democratic convention. (NBC liked it so much after its original use as "Campaign '76" that they renamed it, in '78 and again this year, just to retain it as a punctuation mark for the conventions.)

He is on records, of course, with the 10 sound track album and its spinoff hit single of Ravel's Bolero, in an abbreviated version. He is busier than ever with screen assignments: Shadow Box with Paul Newman as star and director, for television, and the just completed Change of Seasons, with Shirley MacLaine, Anthony Hopkins and Bo Derek (her first movie since 10), and the film he is currently working on, S.O.B., with Julie Andrews. This is yet another collaboration with producer-director Blake Edwards, whose partnership with Mancini goes back to 1958 and Peter Gunn.

He is very much with us in person. His nine symphony orchestra concerts thus far this season (among them three conducting the Boston Pops) have all sold out.

Such accomplishments are a logical development in the life of a composer whose name for well over 20 years has represented the quintessence of melodic style and orchestral finesse, and who has to his credit 20 Grammies (more than anyone else in the recording academy's history), three Oscars, and a dozen Oscar nominations, from The Glenn Miller Story in 1954 to It's Easy To Say (best song) and 10 (best original score), both in 1979.

Mancini is one of those great figures along the middle of the pop music road who can now afford not to worry if an area as important as records dries up. The 10 recording for Warner Brothers was a sound track album; actually he has not been recording regularly since his 20-year, 60-album association with RCA ended in 1978.

"I felt I did some good albums in the last few years before I left them, but it seems the companies have forgotten how to promote that kind of thing.

"Basically, movie writing is what I do."

Over the years, Mancini has learned that the acceptance of his music does not necessarily bear a direct relation to its merit. This is particularly true of his motion picture writing. "You're at the mercy of the popularity of the movie. If it's a good movie, you did a good score; if it's a bad movie, your score means nothing. I happened to love what I wrote for The Prisoner of Zenda; in fact, I think it was one of my best scores, but who will remember that? The picture didn't do well, so everybody just went down together."

The case of the freak Bolero hit offers another instance of what might have been. "Although it sold well over 200,000, one of the charts didn't even list it, because they base their lists on airplay and the single didn't get airplay. I suppose the trouble was that it starts with violas and cellos. Now if I had taken the hottest drummer in town and laid it on top — hell, that thing would have been on every station; but to be fair to the people that heard it in the picture we decided not to tamper with the original orchestration."

DIRECTOR: William Friedkin
NO ONE UNDER 18 YRS.
"Friedkin's film does not presume or pretend to be an account of the whole world of homosexuality. His murder mystery, loosely drawn from some real-life happenings in Manhattan, is set in the so-called heavy leather bars and private clubs and open-air haunts where the taste runs to sadism and masochism. It's the lower depths of the gay male world. Violent sexuality, not style and certainly not romance, is the pattern and violence begets violence, which is what 'Cruising' is all about."

For Colored Girls for every woman

Poet Ntozake Shange's play For Colored Girls is a celebration of womanhood

Progression and universal acceptance of the unique play, For Colored Girls has been a rare experience, and also significant, its Vancouver producer-director Charles Gray, feels.

It originated in San Francisco, based on the work of the fine American poet, Ntozake Shange, who writes with compassion and insight about the lives of women. In its next phase it became a celebrated off-Broadway piece and then moved on to Broadway, to London and major cities throughout the United States, achieving mounting acclaim everywhere.

It had its first Canadian production in Vancouver last spring and was an immediate success, selling out every performance. It now comes to Victoria and will spend five days at the McPherson Playhouse, starting Sept. 9.

The significance of For Colored Girls, according to Gray, lies in the fact that it is not just about black women.

"Its message extends from the particular to the universal," he says. "It's about all women. A powerful celebration of their lives, their needs and dreams, their tragedies and their courage."

Gray says that men go to the show and respond strongly. "They are moved by it, enjoy its funny moments — it certainly contains a wonderful kind of humor. It is potent material that has something to say to people of every color, creed, sex."

One Vancouver commentator called it 'heartbreakingly honest', another said it had 'both guts and grace'.

Gray cast it with six skilled and highly talented black Vancouver actresses but he says his Black Arts Theatre was created by him to give greater scope to all minority groups — not just blacks. His purpose was to help them to learn theatre crafts through workshops in mime, voice, movement and other aspects of the theatre art.

In approaching For Colored Girls, which he defines as a 'choreopoem' he felt it was important to let the piece speak for itself.

"I tried simply to encourage the women to find their own way through the material, to realize its depth, richness and vision for themselves as they related to it," he says.

"It is colorful, constantly moving; there is singing and an improvisational kind of dancing that forms transitions between the poems."

Gray tried, and according to Vancouver critical reactions, succeeded in moulding the group into an ensemble.

He says some people have found the idea of a man directing a play that is essentially a study of the nature of womanhood, somewhat surprising.

"But a man can be objective," he says. "The cast are the interpreters ... I've certainly kept any chauvinistic impulse I may habour out of the direction."

Gray himself is an actor who has worked on CBC television, with Vancouver's Arts Club and West Coast Actors and the Western Canada Theatre that was founded by Tom Kerr.

Under government auspices he went to Africa to the Festival of Arts and Culture at Lagos where the seeds for his work on Colored Girls were planted.

After its Victoria run Colored Girls will move on to Edmonton and Calgary.

Stars shine bright deep in the soap of good 'ol Texas

By JOAN HANAUER

NEW YORK (UPI) — NBC has a new daytime drama called Texas that takes place in Houston.

CBS has a smash hit nighttime soap opera called Dallas.

If you think this is a coincidence, I have some stock in the Umgawa Mining Company of Canada you might want to buy.

Texas goes on the air Aug. 4, 3-4 p.m., Eastern time. It's a spin-off from the show that preceeds it, Another World, and like all soapers production has not been halted by the current actors strike.

The new show opens aboard an airplane, and Another World fans will recognize one of the passengers — Iris Carrington, the wicked witch of Bay City.

Before you can say Procter & Gamble, producer of Texas, the airliner has been rerouted back to Houston so Iris — to her amazement — can deplane and be wooed by an old boy friend she has seen in 25 years.

According to NBC, Texas deals with "the land-rich Marshalls, who must adjust to changing fortunes; the Dekker clan, dedicated to working the Marshall ranch; Alex Wheeler, a millionaire oil man whose flamoyancy is legendary; Victoria and Striker Bellman, whose communications empire affords them great power; and Ryan Connor, a strong-willed individual whose ties to the Middle East become increasingly important."

It's not that simple.

In the very first hour newcomers to Texas also must sort out the murder of a Mideast oil sheik; the long-distance romance between the sheik's daughter, Princess Yasmine, and Connor, who may be a CIA agent; the romance between Terry Dekker, oilman Wheeler's secretary, and a Wheeler executive, Clipper Blake, who is hiding information about the sheik's death.

Also why did Mike Marshall commit suicide? Was it suicide? Will Dawn Marshall continue her art studies? Will Iris and Wheeler find the love they left behind at a small hotel in St. Tropez?

The final question — will the audience ever get it all straight?

That's the big one for NBC, which has had trouble finding the right daytime drama to complete its lineup of Days of Our Lives, The Doctors and Another World.

One sure thing about Texas, people in Houston won't be popping in and out of adulterous beds the way they do on Dallas — not with Procter & Gamble producing the program.

Parks bids farewell to 25 years of 'corn'

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Bert Parks wishes his replacement as master of ceremonies for the annual Miss America Pageant, former television tarzan Ron Ely, "all the joy" that goes with working with 50 young, ambitious and beautiful women every September.

But, after 25 years of singing There She Is to tearful pageant-winners, Parks also offered his successor some advice:

"Remember, it wasn't The Bert Parks Show and it's not The Ron Ely Show."

"You're dealing with 50 amateurs, all young and sweet. You have to project them and protect them," Parks said.

"They look to you for support, especially if they're ill at ease. You don't quite realize the responsibility until you get up there."

Parks' sudden dismissal as the pageant's perennial host in January gave his career the biggest boost since his Broadway heyday in the 1950s. The furor over his firing, pumped up by television's Johnny Carson, made Parks a minor folk hero.

"Man, you see what's happened," Parks said. "It's just absolutely fabulous. My God, I've been on every leading variety show on television."

Parks recently returned from the Philippines, where he was host for the new Miss Young International Pageant. He also is doing TV commercials, speaking at major conventions and helping promote a new Atlantic City casino hotel.

With obvious delight, Parks said he may be too busy to watch Ely from his Greenwich, Conn., home on Miss America's night, always the Saturday after Labor Day. NBC will broadcast the pageant live at 10 p.m. EDT Sept. 6.

"I've completely forgotten about it," he said. "I'm so busy doing what I'm doing, I hope I'll be able to watch it at all."

When told that Ely will be leaving the traditional There She Is to the orchestra, Parks quipped: "Well, then I'll just hum along at home."

Part of the fire behind the Parks furor came from the apparently mistaken notion that he was dumped because he had turned 65. Pageant sources now say age had little to do with it, that it was time for a change after a quarter-century.

"My only attitude is the way in which it was done," Parks said. "(Pagent chief executive Albert) Marks is a lovely man and still a great champion of mine. We're friends.

"Still, I wish he had just called and said, 'Hey Bert, it's time for a change.' Instead, The Associated Press called me with the news," Parks said.

Parks said he believes Miss America will live on, even though he once admitted the pageant is a "corny" part of Americana.

"I think the pageant has built itself a niche that it will have for a long, long time. It will survive easily," he said.

Last laugh for all you teachers

When it arrives at the end of next week, Paul Liitich's face will have a hard time adjusting to repose.

The 1980 Summer Smile Show he stars in vacates the Empress Hotel Crystal Ballroom next Saturday, packing it in for the 28th season.

Producer Anton Gosley has planned to make Wednesday's performance a back-to-school special for teachers. There will be a lower admission price for those providing identification of their profession accompanied by the traditional harrassed look.

Theory behind the 'special' is that fun with the Smile Show cast of Liitich, Mary Monks, Kimm Culkin, Lorie Charters, Deryck Hazel, Patrick Hughes, and David Kirk, and musicians Lorna Paterson and George Dixon, is the perfect tonic to relieve the stress of first week back in the classroom.

Show time is 8:30 nightly. For those who can't get to the regular ticket outlets, a call after noon to 383-3337.

'Cruel joke' haunts Freud

FREUD: The Man And The Cause,* by Ronald W. Clark. Random House. $25.50.
GREATNESS AND LIMITATIONS OF FREUD'S THOUGHT,* by Erich Fromm. Beaverbooks. $12.95.
FREUD: Biologist Of The Mind,* by Frank J. Sulloway. Fitzhenry & Whiteside. $25.95.

Sigmund Freud believed that the psychoanalytic methods he had devised and developed to divide the mind into conscious and unconscious elements and investigate their interactions could be applied not only in the treatment of patients but also in the analysis of famous figures of the past, both real and fictitious. His sometimes ludicrous pronouncements in this regard, notably those dealing with Leonardo and Hamlet, left him open to ridicule and jeopardized his justly gained renown.

Freud's habit of making dogmatic statements, often based on faulty premises, troubled his adherents and delighted his enemies. The fact that he never publicly recanted anything also did nothing to help his cause. In addition, he twice destroyed his collection of notes and letters in order to confuse future biographers; he is known to have deliberately suppressed vital information; and again and again in his analyses, or case histories, he mixed irrelevant facts and conjectures to arrive at a preconceived opinion.

Being the sort of man he was, he may have believed that the writings he left behind would stand accepted and unchallenged. That this is not the case, as numerous books about him, including the three under review today, testify, may be due to the cruel joke that in consciously inviting posterity to accept him uncritically he was unconsciously throwing down the gauntlet to the iconoclasts.

First, let me deal briefly with iconoclastic Frank J. Sulloway's Freud: Biologist of the Mind. This young Harvard-trained historian of science, now a postdoctoral fellow in psychology at the University of California, Berkeley, has compiled what is called an "intellectual biography." I'm not sure I know what that means. If it means an extreme and sustained attempt to impress his peers by prolixity (i.e. "an incidental reaction to the various sensory and somatic stimuli normally impinging upon the mind during a state of sleep" — in other words, a dream!) then he has succeeded magnificently.

My mind is still reeling from trying to digest his 612 pages of verbiage in support of his thesis that most of Freud's creative inspirations were derived from biology, the Darwinian biology of his time, and that Freud the lonely "psychoanalytic hero" who "invented" a totally original psychology through analysis of patients and himself, is an absolute myth.

This tome is an ivory tower production with a vengeance. If Dr. Sulloway had read fewer books, monographs, etc. (there are 56 pages of bibliography) and built his thesis on facts instead of assumptions, and carried out some original research, he would have discovered, for example, that Freud's famous analysis of his dream of "Irma's injection" was fabricated to suppress the fact that the poor woman's "mental" symptoms were in fact physical symptoms, caused not by an injection with a dirty needle but by septicaemia, thanks to a surgeon (Freud's friend and mentor Wilhelm Fliess) leaving yards of gauze in her body.

I figure that if I knew that, then an academic writing a serious reassessment of Freud should also know it, but he didn't. How much else has he missed? I don't know. Neither am I qualified to judge. And as a matter of fact, I really don't give a damn, and you needn't either. While the book may be of some interest to those engaged in various aspects of the "psycho" business, laymen may safely ignore it without a qualm.

Admirers of Erich Fromm will be saddened to learn that he died earlier this year at the age of 80. Considering his lifetime involvement with psychiatry, psychoanalysis and psychology, it seems fitting that the last book he wrote should have been about Freud.

Greatness and Limitations of Freud's Thought is a slim book — a mere 138 pages of text — but a stimulating one, for it seeks to develop Freud's thought through a critical interpretation of its philosophical basis.

As the title implies, Fromm is lavish in his praise of Freud's strengths, but he doesn't mince words when pinpointing the great man's weaknesses, or limitations. The point he makes — and makes convincingly — is that Freud was so strongly influenced by bourgeois materialism that he couldn't conceive of psychical powers for which physiological roots could not be demonstrated.

FREUD . . . gospel challenged

He stresses how Freud's bourgeois male chauvinism limited his value. He had no real understanding of women and love (romance was for the chase and conquest, after which woman's role was procreation and housekeeping; a woman, he maintained, should feed and cherish, first the infant, then the man, and should remain passive and undemanding. Woman gives, and giving is a weakness; man takes, and taking is a strength.) Freud's fixation on sexuality as the root of all psychic forms, says Fromm, prevented his realizing the extent to which individual psychology is also social psychology.

After delivering these and similar harsh verdicts, Fromm concludes by suggesting that a radically different approach to psychoanalysis could lead to our becoming more aware of the structure of the society in which we live and therefore help to change it in ways that could help us to become more human and more free.

Unlike Freud, Fromm was never a prisoner of his formative years nor of the narrowness of European bourgeois society. His contribution, of which his last book is a valuable part, was his recognition that the gospel according to Freud holds few answers for today's pressing global needs.

I have saved the best until last. Ronald W. Clark's Freud: The Man and The Cause is without doubt the most impressive biography of Freud to date, a long overdue book that will be read avidly and prized by interested laymen and professionals in the field alike.

Ernest Jones' monumental three-volume biography, written a quarter of a century ago, remains the essential source material, but it is sickeningly idolatrous. Freud's cardinal weakness was that he was the de Gaulle in his field: one either accepted his view about everything without demur or one became his implacable enemy. Those who dared to question (Jung, Adler and the rest) were banished; only the faithful, unquestioning, sheeplike adherents remained in the fold. The movement deteriorated into a collection of people with second-rate minds sitting at the feet of their god. And Jones was its chronicler.

The welter of Freudian material that has appeared since Jones' work was published has so confused the picture that it has been well nigh impossible to sort out fact from fiction. The crying need has been for a fresh start — an objective view of Freud and his work written by a distinguished biographer without an axe to grind. Ronald Clark has now fulfilled this need with a dispassionate book that is, if possible, superior to the first-rate biographies of the Huxleys, J. B. S. Haldane, Einstein and Bertrand Russell he has written.

Lack of space precludes going into this book in detail. Let me just say that the emphasis is on the human face of Freud: his traumatic childhood (revealed for the first time); his first teenage infatuation (which he tried to expunge from memory); his sex life; his experiments with cocaine; his attitudes toward women; his dubious involvement with numerology and the occult; and his friendships with his mentors and his heir apparent, that were as passionate as their breakups were bitter.

Surprisingly, Freud the psychoanalytic genius emerges as the most human of human beings, a spoiled favorite son who became a devoted paterfamilias, a mountain hiker, ardent mushroom collector, humorist and aphorist.

But all that is but a part of Clark's story. The man's work is treated in some depth and — bless Clark for this — with admirable objectivity and comprehensible language. Here also is the genesis of Freud's theory of the Oedipus complex, his interpretations of dreams, his warnings against the dangers of psycho-biography, and all the rest of the familiar and controversial material — and all of it presented in a new light that shows, as Fromm did, the man's greatness and limitations.

Freud was the first to utilize the importance of the unconscious in motivating human conduct as an aid to trying to cure mental illness. He was also the first to recognize the existence of infantile sexuality. These discoveries alone ensure his lasting fame. For the rest, there are reservations about his theories today. Clark presents all sides and his portrait of the man as statue, from impressive bronze head to clay feet, is comprehensive, eminently fair, and immensely readable.

Leisure reading at its best

By FRED BARNES

Novels such as the four reviewed here represent the epitome of leisure reading — all are fast paced, easy to read, sexy, and, with one exception, no great moral questions are raised.

THE SCORPION SIGNAL,* by Adam Hall. Collins. $13.95.
KENNEDY FOR THE DEFENSE,* by George V. Higgins, Random House. $11.95.
A VERY PRIVATE WAR,* by Jon Cleary, Collins. $14.95.
THE GOLD CREW,* by Thomas N. Scortia and Frank M. Robinson. Random House. $14.95.

One of this reviewer's favorite spies, Quiller, is back in The Scorpion Signal, pitting the legendary British foreign agent against the KGB in the enemy's headquarters, Moscow. The faceless Quiller is up to the standards he has set in eight previous novels, as he escapes from the dread Lubyanka prison while trying to spring Shapiro, another top British agent, and his secrets, from the KGB.

Quiller does indeed seem faceless, as he narrates his own stories and tells little about himself. You get all of his thoughts and actions, but little of his appearance.

Adam Hall is a nom de plume the author adopted for this series of spy stories. He is really Elleston Trevor, a prolific writer, including such novels as The Flight of the Phoenix.

Another favorite writer of escapist fluff is George V. Higgins, whom I remember fondly for his first novel, The Friends of Eddie Coyle. Higgins, who practises law and writes a newspaper column in Boston, seems very much at home when he writes of courts and criminals. His hero is Jerry Kennedy, described by his wife as a classy, but sleazy criminal lawyer. Higgins parades a group of unforgettable clients of Kennedy through these pages with great flair and in a very cohesive fashion. Everything ties together beautifully.

Cadillac Teddy is a case in point. Teddy specializes in Caddies, and he'll steal you the exact Caddie of your choice in no time at all. If you want a Porsche, say, he'll get you that, too, but his heart isn't in it really. "I'm not used to them, you know."

All in all, as readable a novel as anyone could want to relax with.

A Very Private War is the latest (29th) novel by a veteran Australian writer, Jon Cleary, who will best be remembered for The Sundowners, made into a successful movie.

This private war is the remarkable effort put out during the Second World War by the Australian coastwatchers, planters in the Solomon Islands who were cut off as the Japanese swept through the Far East and the South Seas. Moving back into the hills as the Japanese took over island after island, the coastwatchers used radio to keep Australia and the United States up to date on naval movements and bomber runs. This information was a key factor in the Pacific War.

One of the planters was Con Mullane, an American, and his partner was Frank Vokes, an inept but appealing young Australian. Buka, a tough, ruthless native, and a half-caste woman, Ruth Riddle, a medical assistant, round out the party. As they move up and down New Britain, they rescue a German missionary bishop and find a key Japanese general, who alone survived a bomber crash and is badly injured.

Cleary is a competent storyteller with a good story to tell, resulting in a highly-readable, and different, novel.

The Gold Crew is another of those frightening war stories that keep popping up to remind readers of the apparent invevitability of nuclear war — a sort of Dr. Strangelove without the satire. This is a story of the new Trident submarines that stay underwater for three months on each cruise — using two crews to alternate the heavy duty, a gold crew and a blue crew.

Trident, of course, is of particular interest at this time to West Coast Canadians for obvious reasons, and the scenario is a chilling one. The chief of naval operations, spurred by key administration officials, including the president, has been instructed to run a test at sea under war conditions to determine if a typical crew of a Trident would really do its job. If the men were led to believe that their world was in ruins, would they act to destroy the remainder of the world?

Or if their actions in firing their missiles would bring horrible death to their families and friends back home, would they obey an order to fire their missiles?

Chosen for the task is the gold crew of the Trident submarine Alaska. Unknown to the crew, they are carrying four missiles with dummy warheads, which are the ones to be fired. The ship carries a tape-deck that will play out the scenario for them in the form of incoming orders. Only the captain, executive officer and a psychiatrist aboard know the true situation.

By coincidence, some new paint used in a current refit of the sub contains chemicals that turn the crew and officers in a tense underwater environment into paranoids, reacting in frightening terms to the strange situation.

The two authors, Scortia and Robinson, have done a remarkable job of research, and the book rings with an authentic tone. The two cheerfully admit that they left out a good deal of their research because of the fear that it was classified and dangerous to reveal.

Revealing too much of the plot would spoil the story. But readers need not fear their interest will lag. The Gold Crew is a frightening, unsettling story.

HIGGINS . . . 'great flair'

Waves of fantasy

By DONALD WATERFIELD

THE WAVE,* by Christopher Hyde. Seal paperback. $2.50.

The Wave is a highly controversial book. It purports to be partially novel and partially documentary. The bad guys are excessively nasty and coarse, and the sex is explicit. Doubtless it has commercial value, but for me the less lurid but more exciting mechanics of the Columbia River are far more interesting.

The Wave is the astounding result of the collapse of Mica Dam. Don't panic. Mica is not about to fall. But if it did, it would take two Canadian dams and 11 American dams with it.

If Mica lets go, everything in the Columbia valley, including Portland, would be swept into the Pacific. It is Mica's vast reservoir in Canada and its peculiar position, poised 3,000 feet above the city with 14 other artificial and intervening lakes, all in the Columbia's narrow gorge, that is the danger.

If you have seen the Hope slide on a clear day when the distant top of the rock-slide is visible, you might imagine that had there been a small lake at the foot of the slide, Hope would have been drowned. Imagine also such a gigantic avalanche thundering into McNaughton Lake, near Mica Dam.

Historically dams have not earned a reliable reputation. The Vaimont Dam in Italy was overtopped by a wave that drowned 3,000 people. Nearer home, the Teton Dam, earth-filled like Mica on a tributary of Columbia in the U.S., let go in 1976.

In spite of these and other portents I do not think there will ever be a slide into McNaughton or that Mica Dam will ever give way.

Before a rock slide can occur, the side of a mountain must be comparatively unstable, loose, not solid rock. But the northern part of the Columbia Valley is of glacial origin. Ten thousand years ago it was full of ice that scraped and scoured any loose rocks off the mountainsides.

There may have been, at one time, a danger that the dam itself could have leaked and collapsed like the Teton, but since nothing ominous occurred when it was first filled, it is not likely to leak in later years. With time, the great structure becomes bonded to the earth.

In The Wave the huge mass of water surges down the valley, engulfing a nuclear structure at Hanford and disinterring nuclear waste from a "cemetery" further downstream. The vast, poisonously lethal flood, headed for Portland, is quite impractically and impossibly arrested by plugging the valley with the explosion of Castle Rock. Gravity is mysteriously halted.

Intriguingly, there is a vicious character in the story called Bonner who bears no resemblance to the chairman of B.C. Hydro and Power. And another, a "good guy" called Halleran who must be Mike Halleran and known to many. He was born and raised at Duncan, an Interior village which was a casualty of the Columbia Treaty and is now beneath Duncan Lake. Halleran has never forgiven the Canadian and American negotiators of the treaty for destroying his ancestral home, and I sympathize with him. I can understand his loathing for the killers of his valley, but I do not understand his apparent confusion of Hydro's servants with Columbia River Treaty negotiators.

Mica Dam is the biggest and highest in the western world; twice as high as Grand Coulee, many times the mass of Cheop's pyramid. The professional hydrologists who built it are, naturally, immensely proud of their achievement, and to suggest that it might fall or endure for less than a thousand years must be infuriating. Undoubtedly it is libellous, but legally it is hardly practical for the nameless members of a society to take action.

The collapse of Angelo's world

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

THE CHILDREN AT THE GATE,* by Edward Lewis Wallant. Academic Press. $4.50.

At 19, Angelo Demarco lives "in a satisfying solitude"; he is animatd by "a constant, merciless curiosity" that brings him "a sort of cold joy when some new fact (is) revealed to him."

Thus his father's death can be explained by "the electric impulses of the brain and the nature of organic decomposition."

Living with his sexually frustrated mother, his bitter uncle Dominic and his idiot sister Theresa, Angelo moves "with an air of purpose; his lean face was scornful, his fierce gaze picked things to pieces."

What, then, is Angelo's purpose? The most immediate one is looking after his sister:

"No one . . . knew what was in her head; no one knew if there was anything at all: she was tuned to a peculiar frequency, and aimlessness was the shape of her life."

And only Angelo can feed her, talk to her and brush her hair.

Angelo also has another purpose: he works in his cousin's drugstore: 85 hours a week he serves customers, cleans up the place and goes to the nearby hospital to take orders from the patients.

The dissolution of Angelo's world begins one summer when he meets Sammy at the hospital.

Sammy is a new orderly: a skinny, ugly young man with a mouth that won't stop talking nonsense that frightens and disgusts Angelo. And holds him, too: Sammy holds nightly court in the sunroom with Angelo and another orderly named Lebedov.

Sammy, clearly, is mad: "Obvious I'm a self-made man, but I'm still trying to find . . . my calling . . . There's a lot of things, and they're all pushing at me . . . By now I feel like I gotta kill someone to make it worthwhile . . ."

And: "Oh my God, I'm scared for me! I'm so alone up here! . . . Oh, I'm so high — I wish I could come down to you. Wow, wow, isn't this the end?"

And yet: Angelo, locked in his disdainful self-importance; Lebedov, hiding his mania with silence; Sister Louise breathing piety: each of them suffers their own torments without the wit or the courage to either recognize or voice them.

Who is mad, then? Who is sane?

Who will lead them to salvation?

Obviously a mere recognition of one's woes is not salvation; it's only a start. But as the summer passes Angelo begins his painful recognition, and through a series of startling incidents at home and at the hospital is brought to his inevitable conclusion.

Edward Lewis Wallant is probably best known as the author of The Pawnbroker. The Children At The Gate appeared just after his death in 1962. Eighteen years later in paperback it deserves a reading both for its sharply-etched characterizations and for its impeccable sense of time and movement. Economical and irresistible, it will appeal to any reader who hasn't the stomach for the best-selling garbage that pollutes our bookstores now.

City doctor has eyes for refugees

By FRANK SULLIVAN

Cruise working with patient in improvised examining room

A Victoria eye doctor who retired from active practice two years ago, hasn't retired from helping his fellow man.

Dr. Jack Cruise, an opthalmologist in the city for 30 years, spent six weeks of this year in Thailand as half of a two-man team treating eye problems of refugees from Cambodia.

He'd recommend his colleagues do the same if they have time to spare.

Cruise, along with Dr. John Dollar, an optometrist from Tyrone, Penn., withstood sweltering 35 degree celsius heat and oppressive humidity in answer to a plea from the American Refugee Committee—"a very fine organization."

The committee of concerned citizens operates a hospital at Khai O Deng on the Thai side of the border with Cambodia.

Patients of Cruise and Dollar included about 130 of the 129,000 refugees crowded into a six square hectare area. Entire families were living in bamboo-framed mud and rush huts with dirt floors and only as much water as could be tanked in by trucks going 24 hours a day.

Cruise says much of the eye trouble can be laid to former Cambodia president Pol Pot.

"His theory was that if you got rid of all the learned or intelligent people and just had a peasant society, he would be able to handle it better and have peace in the country.

"So he was taking them all out of the cities and putting them 'on farms—working them from 4 o'clock in the morning until dark at night. And if they wouldn't work he'd kill them. He would kill anybody who showed any signs of intelligence at all. Naturally, people who wore glasses were the first ones being killed because that was a sign they were intelligent.

"So people got wise to that and they broke their glasses or buried them and hit for the border."

Many of those—accountants, doctors, lawyers and pharmacists—couldn't work because most were in the age group where they needed glasses.

The American Refugee Committee, faced with having no one to do eye work, asked Rotary International to furnish an opthalmologist and an optometrist. Rotary responded with the names of two of its members—Cruise and Dollar. The two volunteered and went together.

Between them, they examined more than 2,000 people and gave out about 1,800 pairs of used glasses.

Cruise, examining for pathology, found many cases of advanced cataracts, scars of the cornea and other serious eye problems.

"We found it was almost a different ball game. Sure we got the glasses fixed up for them, but all this surgery needed to be done.

"I had my surgical kit there with me but there was no place to work. So I was only able to do a few operations. But I organized all the cases and got them ready for someone else to do after I left." He also arranged an operating theatre for his successor.

(Incidentally, the next opthalmologist sent by the refugee committee was also a Canadian from Montreal whose wife was a trained eye operating nurse.)

Cruise was able, however, to do some eye surgery. At the same time he saw a number of gunshot wounds and illnesses such as vitamin A deficiency which can lead to lack of vision and affect the entire body.

Before Cruise left for Thailand, he phoned Art Jenkins of the Calgary-based Operation Eyesight. Jenkins sent 3,000 pairs of glasses. But they were held up in U.S. customs and didn't arrive in Bangkok until Cruise had left.

In the meantime, Cruise and Dollar carried on with glasses they could find, in addition to some donated by Bangkok Rotary Club.

There was no sense of crusading, he says of his experience in the camp, in an area where hundreds had been killed and which was still in earshot of sporadic border gunfire.

"I was just there to try to help out. It was a feeling of frustration most of the time. You just felt that you would like to do an awful lot more. But you couldn't. So much blindness that you couldn't do anything for, and some that you could have done something for if you had the facilities to work."

The doctor outlined his Thailand experiences in an interview and during a meeting this week of the Victoria Rotary Club.

He says Rotary International through its 3-H plan (health, hunger and humanity) has raised about $5½ million for medical relief and has spent much of it on more than two million polio inoculations for children in the Philippines.

Perspectives

By Rev. John A. Davidson

A few months after his wife died, C.S. Lewis, the English literary scholar and lay theologian, wrote this in a letter to a friend: "I am learning a great deal. Grief is not, as I thought, a state but a process, like a walk in a winding valley which gives you a new landscape every few miles."

Some of you are now passing through that winding valley. Others may have had recent experience of the grief of bereavement. And all of us experience that grief at some times during our lives.

Grief begins with shock—and the shock continues for a time, in varying degrees of intensity. You have feelings of unreality, of inner numbness, of emotional dryness. This is the almost inevitable first reaction. And we should be thankful for it, for it gives us some respite from hard reality: someone has called it "nature's gentle anesthesia."

The initial shock is followed, often rather quickly, by a whirlpool of strong, painful feelings– feelings of confusion, of isolation, of unfocused hostility, sometimes of guilt and remorse and resentment. It is only when you accept these feelings that you are able to work through them. They are quite normal feelings, and should not be considered signs of emotional weakness.

Do not be afraid to express your grief feelings. Big boys and big girls should cry sometimes. Never hold back from expressing your grief honestly and openly. In grief situations the quivering lip is generally far more honest and far more wholesome than an affected stiff upper lip.

It is not easy to accept the death of a person or thing you have loved, not easy to deal with your strong feelings of grief. Most people need from three to six months to come to terms with such a loss.

When you are grief-stricken you should try to get back to your ordinary pattern of life as soon as possible. Studies of grief indicate that it can rarely be handled by idle, inert mourning, and that it is usually assuaged and softened by purposeful activity.

Tennyson, after the death of his friend, Arthur Hallam, wrote, "I must lose myself in action, lest I wither in despair." For most of us, the longer we spend in idle grief the longer it will take to come to wholesome terms with our bereavement.

But there can be no rushing of the grief process. It takes time. It entails walking on a rough road through a winding valley, not driving easily on a freeway. In his widely read book of some years ago, Peace of Mind, Rabbi Joshua Liebman, commented on what he called "grief's slow wisdom." We must always respect "Grief's slow wisdom," both in our own grief and in the grief of others.

(Dr. Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

Church chronicles

The grand finale of the 13 summer outdoor Christian gospel services at Beacon Hill Park's Cameron bandshell will be on Sunday 7 p.m.

It will be in charge of the Victoria Alliance Church under Pastor H. Orlin Craig who will conduct the service, assisted by Pastor Daniel Ho of the Victoria Chinese Alliance Church.

Helping will be Craig's assistant pastor, Mel Hoskyn, from Richmond, who, with his wife Jill, is serving here before entering overseas work for the church.

The Gospel message will be delivered by Alan McWhirter.

The musical program will include two numbers by a mixed choir conducted by Curt Bergen, singing Go Ye Into All the World and Behold, He Cometh, vocal solos by Jackie Langley and Simon Leung, and vocal duet by Wayne and Mary Stokes of the Sidney Alliance Church. Pianist will be Helen Craig, and song leader Mel Hoskyn.

Final program in the 18th annual summer recital series sponsored by Christ Church Cathedral will be held today at 4 p.m. Taka Kling on harp and Beal Thomas on organ are featured artists to wind up the Music in the Cathedral concerts that have taken place each Saturday during July and August.

Canada may have a new first among authors. She is Margaret Kuhn Campbell of Halifax, Nova Scotia, who, last year at the age of 81, published her first book and is now working on a second.

Her Tale of Two Dykes and deals in with the environment and history of the area in which she was born, Cole Harbor, Nova Scotia.

She is the wife of Dr. H. E. Campbell and both have devoted their lives to the work of the United Church of Canada in the maritime provinces.

Mrs. Campbell has three sisters living in Victoria; Mrs. F. M. Campbell, Mrs. Arthur Moorhouse and Mrs. Helen H. Ellis. Many former Maritimers now living here will be interested to read of her achievement.

'Storefront church' honored

Dedication ceremonies today and Sunday for the Mustard Seed mission church will mark the first time in Canada a "storefront church" has received this honor.

With a next-door pawnbroker's store becoming the sancturary for the growing downtown outreach ministry at 550 Pandora, the Mustard Seed will officially become a part of the Baptist Union of Western Canada, said Pastor Gipp Forster.

It will become more closely allied with Emmanuel Baptist Church, which has been a major benefactor in the past.

Among those attending dedication ceremonies at 1:15 p.m. today will be representatives from the city, police, the Baptist Union and other guest speakers.

Sunday at 1:30 p.m. the first official service in the new sancturay will take place with Rev. Norman Archer officiating.

Although official recognition will ease the congregation's financial burden somewhat, it won't change the style of ministry, Forster says.

"We'll be the first nondenominational Baptist church, if that makes any sense," he said.

The church will be made up of people who want to come downtown and work at street outreach, who "want to put their Christianity where their mouth is."

The five-year-old church, which focuses on the needs of street people in downtown Victoria, has always depended heavily on volunteers, and will continue to look to non-Baptist congregations for support.

The Mustard Seed takes its name from Jesus in Matthew 17:20: "If you have faith no bigger even than a mustard-seed, you will say to this mountain 'Move from here to there!' and it will move; nothing will prove impossible for you."

Benedict: pillar of civilization

By PAUL BENNETT

This year is the 1,500th anniversary of the birth of one of the great civilizing influences on Western civilization—St. Benedict.

Had there been no St. Benedict, people would be less secure in their human rights, less civilized, less religious than they are.

Today, the Benedictines are spread around the world, and, in B.C., the main concentration is at Westminster Abbey, in Mission.

The abbey, whose tall belltower can be seen for miles around, is two miles northeast of the city centre, and welcomes visitors for both tours and public worship.

Accommodation is available for husbands and their wives who may wish to spend a few days of recollection or a weekend at the monastery. Special arrangements may be made for groups.

Persons intending to take a brief respite from the hubbub of the everyday world are requested to phone the abbey at 826-8975 or write the Guestmaster at Westminster Abbey, Mission, B.C., V2V 4J2.

FOUNDED some 20 years ago as an offshoot of a Benedictine community in Oregon, the abbey is well endowed with works of art, many of them produced by talented monks, a farm, and the campus of the seminary of Christ the King.

Currently the all-concrete abbey chapel is being poured and it makes for an interesting visit for Islanders making a trip to the Lower Mainland.

It all started without fanfare at a place called Subiaco, in central Italy, when Benedict was about 17.

For three years he lived in a tiny cave high on the side of the Apennine Mountains. Mountains have always been known as places to uplift the heart.

So off the beaten path was this hermit's dwelling that food had to be lowered to him by friendly shepherds from a plateau jutting out over the cave.

Benedict was not trying to escape from anything or anyone, but was simply doing in his way what many people do—seek God.

After leaving his hermit's cell in the cliff, Benedict remained at Subiaco for nearly 30 years, teaching, working and praying.

DURING that time, he attracted others—as bees are drawn to clover—and gradually a monastic lifestyle emerged.

As his followers grew in number, the primitive community pulled up stakes and moved south to Monte Cassino.

This became a famous monastery, a centre of Christian culture, learning and prayer.

Over the course of centuries, Benedictine monks evangelized the pagan Anglo-Saxons of England, the barbaric tribes of Germany, the Franks, the Celts.

Everywhere they went these civilizers built houses—thriving centres of education, moral guidance and social betterment.

The monks developed and taught new and effective means of agriculture and animal husbandry. They drained marshes, cleared the land, built hospitals and hospices adjoining their monasteries.

Benedictine houses were, in effect, oases of learning, of human improvement and of Gospel light, amid wastelands of darkness, poverty and ignorance.

Peace was their motto and Christ's word was their message.

THE MONASTERIES of the spiritual sons and later daughters of St. Benedict were often destroyed in wars, invasions and civil unrest.

But the monks, not discouraged even by the loss of most of their monasteries in Reformation Europe, always rebuilt. Their lifestyles endured, an imperishable witness to God's love and to the human determination to make the earth a better place for all of us.

In the formation of any community, there is a need for an agreed structure. So the founder wrote his Rule for Monasteries, a landmark for its spirit of Christian humanism.

Benedictine monasticism today is expressed in three basic elements—prayer, reflective reading and work.

There are many different families of Benedicines. Although they all ightly claim the Father of Western Monasticism as their own, their lifestyles vary.

Oak Bay inducting rector

Rev. Robert Sansom, former rector of Sidney and North Saanich, will be inducted as rector of St. Mary the Virgin Anglican Church in Oak Bay Thursday at 7:30 p.m., by his predecessor, Bishop Hywel Jones.

All parishioners are expected to be present, together with old friends of St. Mary's who live outside the parish.

Sansom became the fourth rector of St. Mary's Aug. 3.

Married to Pamela with two children, Robin aged 16 and Jane, 14, Sansom was born in Sherwood, Nottingham, England, in 1929, and educated at West Bridgford Grammar School. He served two years in the RAF.

After theological training at St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead, and post-ordination studies at Nottingham University, he was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Southwell in 1962, and priested in 1963.

After serving in parishes in England, he was appointed Rector of North Saanich and St. Andrew's, Sidney in 1970, where he remained to the present time.

A member of the Sidney Rotary Club and padre to Branch 37 Royal Canadian Legion, he is clerical secretary to the diocese and member of the executive council and the provincial council.

His brother, John, is the city engineer for Victoria.

A reception will be held in the church hall after the service so parishioners and friends can greet the Sansom family.

Before the judge

An 18-year-old Saanich youth involved in a Feb. 29 robbery of an Oak Bay grocery store and a 40-kilometre car chase Aug. 1 between Victoria and Duncan was remanded until Wednesday for sentencing.

Joey Day, of 821 Sevenoaks, pleaded guilty Friday in Victoria provincial court to having his face masked during the commission of an armed robbery and criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang entered stays of proceedings on charges of armed robbery in connection with the holdup and criminal negligence causing bodily harm to a motorcyclist, failing to remain at the scene of an accident, and impaired driving in connection with the high-speed chase along the Malahat section of the Island Highway.

Lang told Judge Harold Alder that the holdup occurred shortly before 7 p.m when two persons, both masked, entered the T and W Market, 1165 Newport.

When owner Gamaliel Tsai came out from the back, he saw one holding a knife and the other opening the cash register and scooping the money out.

The robbers fled on bicycles and were pursued in a car by four females for four blocks until they lost sight of the youths.

Day was arrested minutes later and admitted taking part in the holdup. He led police to where clothing and two stolen, 10-speed bicycles had been ditched.

In staying the armed robbery charge, Lang said he was satisfied Day was the follower in this case and was not the one brandishing the weapon.

However, Land added, Day was on probation at the time because of a Feb. 6 conviction for theft under $200 for which he received a suspended sentence and a six-month probation term.

The car chase, Lang said, started about 10.10 p.m. when police noticed a truck without headlights going through red lights on Douglas Street.

The red light was activated on the unmarked police car after Day, who was the driver, rear-ended another vehicle and left the scene.

During the chase, Day drove on the wrong side of the Island Highway forcing vehicles into the ditch, reached speeds of 110 kmh, sideswiped two motorcycles, one bus and one car and ran a roadblock set up at Mill Bay.

Three additional police vehicles were pressed into the chase before Day was finally stopped at Whipple Tree Junction, Lang added.

Defence lawyer Fredric Bronson requested the delay in sentence in order to bring character witnesses to court.

A 42-year-old man who failed to return to Wilkinson Road jail on a temporary absence pass was given a six-month jail term and Alder recommended that the term be served at the Alouette River unit for the treatment of alcoholism.

Manuel Martins pleaded guilty to being unlawfully at large Aug. 24.

Martins was convicted of impaired driving and fraud June 9 and was given a six-month jail term.

A 19-year-old youth who took a collection tin belonging to the Save The Children Fund received a seven-day jail term and 12 months probation.

Brian Gordon Fisher, also known as Brian Gordon Alexander Royal, of 1258 Balmoral, pleaded guilty to theft under $200. He had been convicted Tuesday of breaching a previous probation order and was given a four-day jail term by Alder.

A 44-year-old man who kicked in a glass door and window because he was intoxicated and couldn't find his friends was given a seven day jail term.

Larry Clarence Parsons, of no fixed address, was also placed on 12 months probation, and ordered to perform 100 hours of community service work, accept alcohol therapy and counselling, and make restitution of $400 to the Building Corporation of B.C. (BCBC) by April 30.

Donald Eric Bobroske, 25, of Quesnel, was given a 30-day jail sentence for impaired driving and driving while under suspension.

Bobroske, who was living at 310 Roberts temporarily, was stopped in a BATvan roadblock on Goldstream Avenue shortly after midnight Thursday and breath test readings of .21 and .20 were obtained.

Police also found out that Bobroske was under a driving ban at the time.

Mulligan said Bobroske had three previous convictions for driving under suspension and two for driving with a blood-alcoho content over .08, both in 1977.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Daniel William Hess, 22, of 1929 West Shawnigan Lake Road, $500; Donald Stopherd, 34, of 2911 Sooke Lake Road, $500; D'arcy Ray McFarland, 27, of 880 Downey, $400; Christian Joseph Belleau, 26, of 1342 Saunders, $400; Rachel Parsons, 64, of 968 Woodhall Drive, $350 and Randal Neil MacMillan, 31, of 2023 Rita, $350.

In addition, McFarland and Belleau were both fined $200 for refusing a breath test demand.

Norwegians outguzzled

OSLO (AP) — A Frenchman drinks four times as much as a Norwegian, a West German drinks three times as much and an Englishman almost twice as much, Norwegian government statistics show. Still, the Norwegian government said Thursday its citizens drink too much — about four quarts a person annually. It recently proposed 34 measures to reduce alcohol consumption.

Paris halts modernization to preserve ornate beauty

By GILBERT SEDBON

PARIS (Reuter) — In the last three years Paris has undergone a major facelift and largely halted the modernization of the city's architecture, which was the mode 10 years ago.

Not since the days of Baron Haussmann who built the city's boulevards and avenues 120 years ago have so many business and tourist areas been turned into pedestrian zones.

These include numerous streets in the old market area of Les Halles, the Beaubourg (Pompidou) art centre, Montmartre, the Sorbonne and the Latin Quarter.

Trees are being planted in most districts along with old-style lamp posts, restoring some of their picturesque "village" characteristics.

The costly renovation of the Metro subway has given the once-shabby underground railroad system a new glow.

One result has been to slow down the building of skyscrapers and modern apartment blocks, offensive to residents and tourists alike. A viewer from the Eiffel Tower can see the worst of it — the transformation of Montparnasse, the skyscraper office development of LaDefense, the suburban eyesore of Creteil.

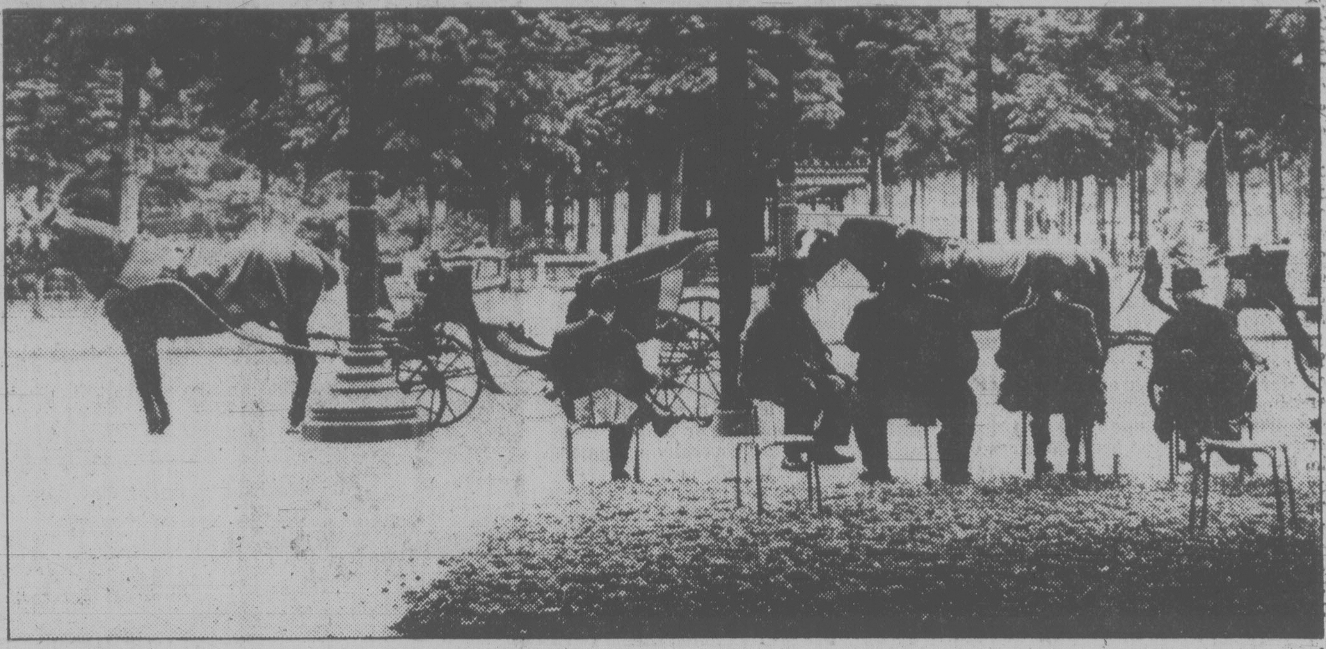
But by and large, Paris has managed to preserve its beauty, ornate buildings, homogeneity and density.

President Valery Giscard d'Estaing has stopped the flirtation with glass-and-concrete towers on the River Seine embankment, for this decade at least. He also cancelled the construction of the Left Bank Expressway and reprieved the Cite Fleurie, a haven of artists' studios in the concrete desert of the new Place d'Italie district of southern Paris.

But the main credit for the city's innovations, particularly the expanding pedestrian areas, flower beds on the Champs Elysees, Place de l'Opera and traffic circles in many parts of the capital, goes to Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac.

After a series of initial clashes with central government, the mayor won a more or less free hand.

Halfway through his mandate as Paris's first elected mayor in 200 years, Chirac can be pleased with efforts so far to pep up the capital.



Elderly Frenchmen enjoy the peacefulness of a Paris boulevard, where skyscrapers are banned

How to eliminate big-pack attack

CALGARY (CP) — The most frustrating part of any vacation, especially for novice travellers, usually starts days before the trip with a gripping fit of indecision over what to pack.

Most novice travellers underpack or overpack. But whatever the case, usually the latter, the consequences can turn a quiet, relaxing holiday into a painful nightmare.

Arms and backs strained from carrying heavy luggage are symptoms experienced by many travellers.

Preventive medicine like travel aids and smart planning is the key to worry-free travel, says Bea Yuffe, a Calgary travel consultant.

Most important is keeping the weight off the arms and the back, said Yuffe, who never goes anywhere without her "cart-a-bag" — a portable luggage carrier.

"It's the greatest little natural porter in the world," she said in an interview, pointing to the light-metal carrier that can carry a load of luggage and afterwards be folded away into a carrying pouch with a shoulder strap.

Another trick to reducing the burden is purchasing soft-sided luggage, which has become popular because it is light and usually holds more than hard-sided luggage.

When Debbie Symons, an Air Canada flight attendant, goes on vacation she carries soft-sided bags made of the same material as parachutes.

"They're better than conventional suitcases because they don't rip and they're easy to clean off."

But suitcases aren't the main problem for travellers, who often find themselves lugging a heavy load no matter what they pack their belongings in.

Most people just don't realize how little they need for a trip, said Yuffe, who suggests taking only half what you think you are going to need.

Instead of taking a variety of clothes, bring only a few co-ordinating outfits and you'll have enough, she said.

Symons agrees: "Take clothes that have two functions, like a jean skirt that takes you a lot of places."

As for accessories, the fewer the better, said Yuffe. That includes footwear.

Men and women headed to warm, sunny destinations should take "no more than a pair of sandals, one pair of shoes and maybe a pair of bedroom slippers."

But besides cutting down on shoes, travellers should also try to reduce the number of toiletries they carry.

It helps to store portions of toiletries such as shampoo and creams in smaller containers. Another good idea is to buy special, small-sized products.

Also take only the most crumple-resistant clothes made of fabrics such as polyester, and stay away from anything made of cotton.

New York demands special precautions

By DON CAYO

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — A victim of two attacks by robbers and one by vandals during a week-long vacation in New York, Molly Hughes says the age of free-spirit travel is over.

"I learned that you just cannot economize on your comfort and security," said Ms. Hughes, who is $800 poorer after returning from what was supposed to be a tight-budget vacation. "From now on, I'll stay in hotels that I consider to be over-priced."

Her trouble started after two days in a $25-a-night, once-fashionable hotel that is still the home of some aging celebrities. Carpet layers moved her belongings out of her room and someone else took over from there.

Everything — even eyeglasses and toothpaste — was gone.

Angered by indifferent management, she switched to another modest hotel where someone entered her locked room — apparently without difficulty — and took $300 while she was down the hall in the shower.

Meanwhile, someone stole her spare tire and battery and put water in the gas tank of her car which had been left at a service station in Boston.

Jim Allen, of the Canadian consulate in New York, said Ms. Hughes' experience of being hit three times in one week is unusual and probably attributable to just plain bad luck. But robbery itself is not so unusual, especially for those who are easily identified as tourists or who try to economize by staying in low-rent districts.

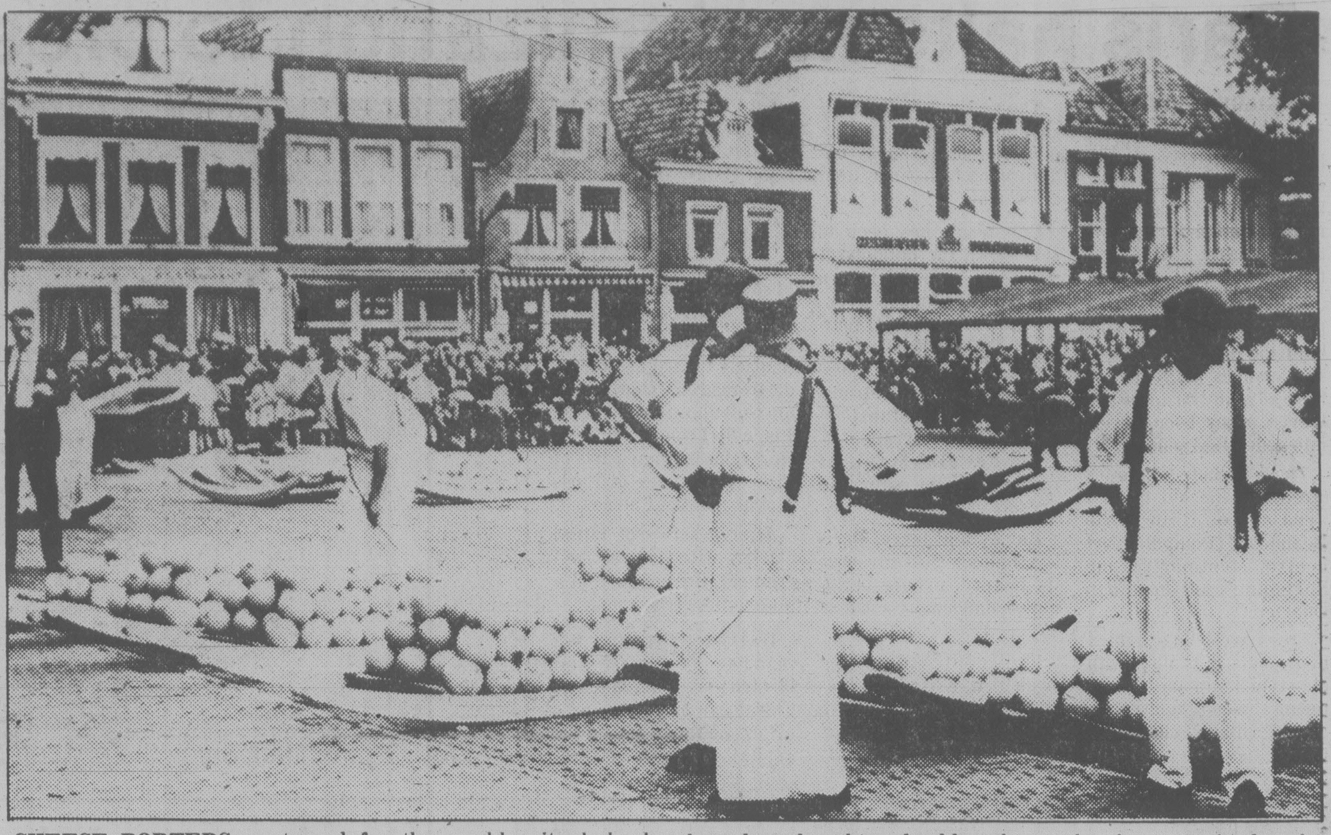
Ms. Hughes, a broadcast journalist who has been to New York before, does not fit the stereotype of the visiting rube and neither, said Allen, do most Canadians.

"Basically Canadians are pretty low-profile in New York," he said in a telephone interview. "There is no obvious difference in language or color or dress and Canadians are generally not noticed very much. . ."but if you make it very obvious that you're a tourist — staring up at the tall buildings and things like that — then sooner or later somebody's going to lift your wallet."

Allan said tourists in any big city are well advised to follow a few basic rules.

Women should clutch their purses tightly all of the time. Men should separate cash and credit cards.

And nothing valuable should be left in hotel rooms — even high-class hotel rooms. Hotel safes are the only place for items like passports, often lost by Canadians passing through on their way to other countries.



CHEESE PORTERS, costumed for the weekly ritual, load, unload and carry Dutch cheeses on special sled-like barrows at the cheese market in the North Holland city of Alkmaar. Cheeses have been bought and sold at the market for centuries but the ceremony is now more for the show than the actual conduct of the cheese trade.

The Magnificent Adventure

Looking south along the Pacific Coast from California's Big Sur

The Mother Lode towns have gone respectable

STAN DELAPLANE

The afternoon heat lay thick as a blanket on the land, and all over the long California valley tourists scurried to find an air-conditioned room for the night.

These are stay-at-home vacation days. For the first time in 25 years passports to Europe are down. Hawaii hotel rooms, plenty of space.

But California is packed. And I ran from Pismo Beach and Morro Bay, all "no vacancy" and, at 6 o'clock, got the last room in Paso Robles. Temperature 104 degrees.

Each year, nine million tourists come to California from out-of-state. Three-million more come from abroad. Thirteen million Californians get in travel statistics by taking trips more than 100 miles from their homes.

They leave $16 BILLION, making the Golden State the first tourist destination. (Hawaii gets only four million people a year.)

Tourists are the state's number one industry. It will surprise you that agriculture is second ($12 billion). And that the richest crop is cotton.

Carmel and Monterey: "There isn't a room on the Peninsula," a hotel told me by phone. "We could use a thousand more beds. We're booked so full we're only taking reservations for the last week in September."

But this is home country. I grew up in Carmel when we parked against the pine trees in the middle of the main street and there was one cop, Gus, who rode a white horse.

John Bulmer at Los Laureles Lodge in the valley put us up in the conference room where we could have played basketball.

Carmel Valley is a beautiful place. The Carmel River, where I went swimming, has been dammed three times, damn it. And I think my old swimming hole is down to a trickle.

The artichoke fields near the old mission have been ripped out. There's an enormous shopping centre in its place. Sic transit gloria. (Or was it Eloise?)

Th Mother Lode: The gold rush towns began to disappear under brown summer grass. Iron doors sagged on brick buildings where you could read in faded lettering: "Wells Fargo."

My great-grandfather came here in 1850 and spent three years digging for gold.

In his diary he wrote: "I have never been able to compose a sentence of words that fully portrayed my feelings of exquiiste happiness that those little lumps of gold in my pocket gave me."

Drytown on Dry Creek is a couple of miles from his first claim. In 1850 it had 21 saloons and 10,000 miners to patronize them. Today, the highway sign says: "Drytown. Pop. 79." There's one place selling beer. Its window sign says: "The only wet spot in Drytown."

Most of the Mother Lode towns have gone respectable. Hangtown renamed itself Placerville. Fiddletown went back to that name after a brief fling at calling itself Oleta.

Ione holds on to its fancy name — with no reference to its original title of Bedbug. Pokerville of 1850 is now Plymouth. Poverty Flat simply disappeared.

As California bursts with new people, the mountain towns are springing back to life. Industry moves from the expensive cities to cheap land. A labor force follows them. Workers find sparkling clear air and splendid living in the pine forests.

On a back road you never heard of, I found a modern building with a sign: "Solid State Electronics."

The cost: gasoline at $1.39 a gallon ran expenses up well over $100 during the week we drove over California's magnificent highways.

Motels are not expensive: Large, modern motel rooms — swimming pools, color TV, air-conditioning — ran $22, $28. The highest $30.

Food is good. Breakfasts run about $10 for two. Dinners $20 to $25.

Try it. You'll be pleased.

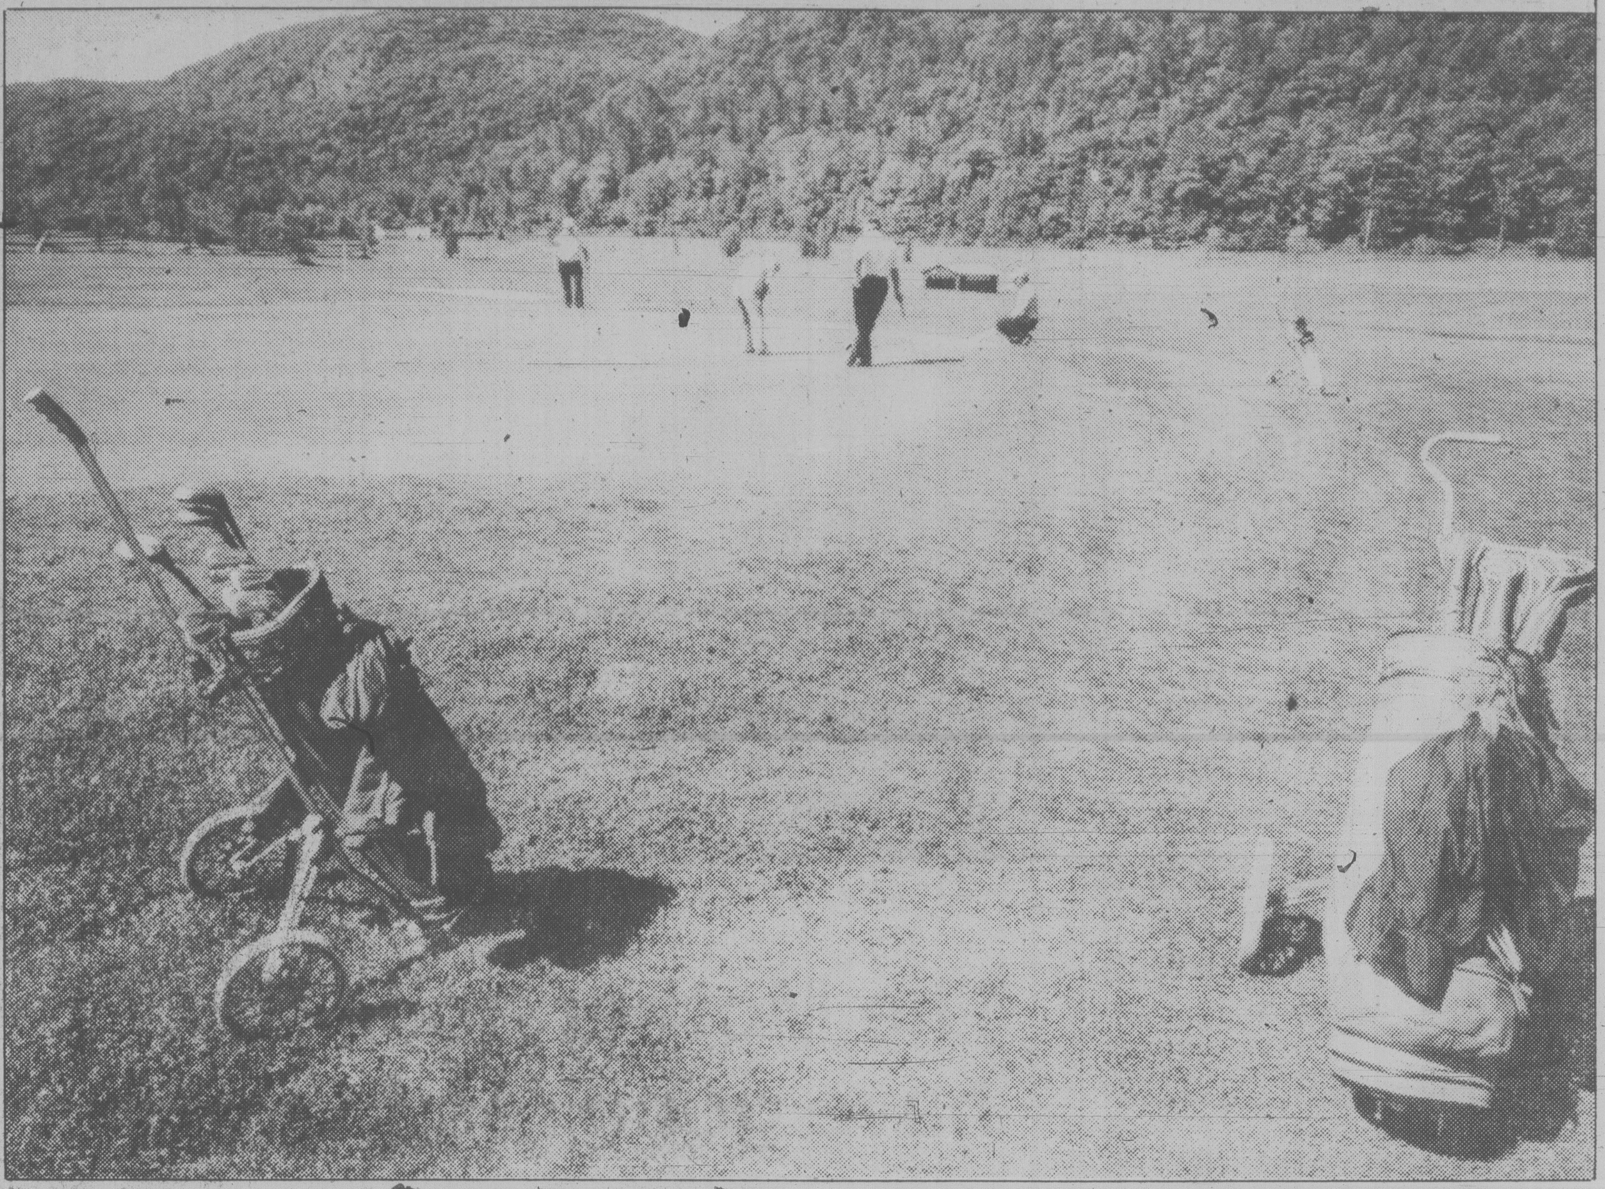
Here's a museum where it's natural to putter!



Laurentians look down on Kingsway Golf and Country Club links, located only minutes away from downtown Ottawa

Canada's National Capital Region has a special attraction for practitioners of the "royal and ancient" game of golf, and for museum-lovers in general. It's the Canadian Golf Museum and Historical Institute, which houses the personal collection of W. Lyn Stewart, owner and operator of the Kingsway Golf and Country Club, Mountain Road, Aylmer, Quebec.

The museum is located in the Kingsway's clubhouse, which is a story in itself. It was built circa 1820 by pioneer John Hayworth, adjacent to what was to become the Mackenzie King Estate in the Laurentian Mountains. It was later purchased by the Mulvihille family and came to be known as Mulvihille House.

Stewart purchased the heritage building several years ago, and has since renovated it to serve as a clubhouse and museum. The addition of a modern restaurant-lounge does not detract from the hominess of the original building with its high ceilings, large windows and brick fireplace.

He could not have picked a more picturesque location for the museum and semi-private golf club. Only 20 kilimetres from downtown Ottawa; the drive along Mountain Road as it winds its way into the Laurentians is delightful.

However, the museum is the real attraction with its collection of golf clubs and balls, prints and books dating back to the 18th century. Famous prints and numerous club trophies adorn the walls and mantelpiece of the clubhouse, and an old-style telephone hangs on the wall near the entrance to the museum section of the building.

To better appreciate the artifacts housed in the museum, visitors are invited to view a 10-minute film entitled A Century of Golf in Canada. The film was produced for the museum in 1973, the centennial year of North America's first golf club, the Royal Montreal. It concentrates on the development of the game in Canada, with emphasis on some of the great amateur golfers this country has known.

The earliest origins of the game have been traced to The Netherlands where the Dutch played it on the frozen waterways. But the game as we know it today was developed at St. Andrews in Scotland.

For those who miss the film, a wooden plaque from St. Andrews provides that country's interpretation of the origin and development of the game. A print of that community's world-famous course is also on view.

The museum's prime attraction is its display of clubs, collected in North America and Great Britain. Included is a collection of putters featuring the pendulum putter popularized by Sam Snead. Some of the clubs are homemade and some have been outlawed.

Another display features old clubs which date as far back as 1834. These clubs have thick grips, apparently to absorb the vibrations caused by contact with hard or frozen balls. The older clubs were hickory-shafted, with aluminum heads.

A display of clubs from the period 1900 to 1929 explains that clubs were then known by name, rather than the modern-day numbers. For instance, a five iron was called a Mashie, the two wood was a Brassie and the three wood was a spoon.

A fourth display shows the evolution of the shaft of the club from hickory through steel, bamboo, fibreglass, aluminum and graphite. One of the more interesting clubs in this display is an adjustable one found in the Isle of Orleans near Quebec City, in 1923.

Although Stewart's collection of golf clubs totals 300, only the most interesting of these are on display. One of the most novel is a leather-faced spoon by Willie Park, winner of the first British Open in 1860. An iron club by J. H. Oke, winner of the first Canadian Open in 1904, is also featured.

The evolution of the golf ball is also displayed, from the feather ball (1830), through the gutty (1848) and the rubber-core ball (1898). The modern, high-compression ball is displayed, but one of the most interesting is a wooden ball developed in South Africa during the First World War.

The museum also has a small collection of golf stamps from South Africa, Bermuda and Gambia.

Prints adorning the wall include the earliest colored illustration of golf in North America from an 1885 Montreal newspaper. Among the personally autographed pictures is one of Grand Slam winner Bobby Jones, who, as an amateur, won the British Amateur, British Open, United States Amateur and United States Open all in the same year. 1980 is the Golden Anniversary of that unrivalled feat.

There is also an autographed picture of Francis Ouimet, the giant-killer who shocked some of the world's best by winning the U.S. Open at the age of 19. A picture of Gene Sarazen, whose now famous double eagle won him the Masters, also hangs on the wall.

Another interesting display is a list of the original 13 rules of golf compared with today's rules, which are so numerous they are published in booklet form. There is also a library of books on golf, the oldest one dated 1875.

One could say a visit to the Pro Shop, operated by club pro Ray Pariseau, drives home the significance of many of the exhibits. Here all the modern equipment is on display, and the resemblance between many of the modern clubs and those housed in the museum is astonishing. With modifications, many of them have come full-circle.

It was designed and built by Lyn Stewart, and features a mountain-fed stream, crossed at one point by a covered bridge. Before teeing off for the ninth hole, golfers can quench their thirst with the cold mountan water. The course also has a driving range and an area for putting practice.

As for its setting, the Kingsway course is unrivalled in the National Capital Region. The Laurentian Mountains form a sort of semi-circle around it, and the lush greenery of the mountains and the rail fences make you feel you are hundreds of kilometres from the bustle of city life.

The scenery is especially beautiful in the fall when the leaves of the trees change colors, providing a panoramic background.

An excursion to the Canadian Golf Museum and Historic Institute is a must for avid golfers visiting and living in Canada's National Capital Region. The museum is open daily, and admission is free.

There are also numerous other golf courses in the area open to the public and some have special rates for tourists.

For general information on Canada as a travel destination contact the Canadian Government Office of Tourism, Ottawa, Canada, K1A 0H6.

Hawaii not just beaches but golf courses, too

By MURRAY J. BROWN

Most vacationers conjure up visions of sun-kissed, surf-fringed, sugary-white beaches when thinking of Hawaii. But there are some who will picture lush rolling fairways and carefully manicured greens.

The fact is that golf is — and has been — one of the other major attractions in the island state in the Pacific. When Kapalua Resort opens its second 18-hole Village Course later this year, it will be Maui's seventh, the 23rd in the four major Neighbor Islands and the 38th in Hawaii. And more are planned.

Since the first resort courses opened in the early 1960s, challenging courses and spectacular scenic beauty have combined to lure ever increasing numbers of visitors from the beaches, especially in the Neighbor Islands.

In 1979, an estimated 85,000 to 100,000 played courses designed by virtually all the top names in the business — from the Robert Trent Joneses, Sr. and Jr., to Arnold Palmer — on the islands of Maui, Hawaii, Kauai and Molokai.

The island-hopping golfer can pick and choose from a variety of exceptional settings. They range from the meticulously prepared lava fields on which courses were laid out at Kaauhou-Kona and Mauna Kea on the Big Island of Hawaii, to the beachfront ranchland on which the course at Kaula Koi on Molokai was built, to the sweeping panoramic vistas of mountains, seas and pineapple fields in Maui.

Quebec offers many 'sea' cruises

By BERNARD RACINE

Popular ferry the Louis Jolliet prepares to cast off with load of tourists aboard

QUEBEC (CP) — Although the gracious old Saguenay steamers no longer ply the St. Lawrence River, the Quebec City area still offers visitors a number of cruises.

It's the best way to see the huge rocky outcrop on which the city is built as Cartier, Champlain and Wolfe saw it — a strategic site that dominates the river for miles upstream and down.

Below Quebec City the St. Lawrence divides around the gentle slopes of Ile d'Orleans and then forms an ever-widening estuary.

The waters here are slightly salty and tidal and not far downstream the people who live on its shores commonly call it "the sea" rather than "the river."

Immediately upstream is the last "narrows" the river passes through on its way to the Gulf. The water here is deep and fast-flowing, with steep precipices on both shores.

This is where James Wolfe landed in 1759 and where engineers and workmen finally put the Quebec Bridge across the river after two disastrous collapses in 1905 and 1912.

For a short excursion, the visitor can choose one of the best sightseeing deals still available — the ferry ride from Quebec City across to Levis and back.

The round trip costs 50 cents for pedestrians, if you don't get off on the other side, and takes less than an hour.

Departures are every half-hour from the dock below the walls of the Old City.

The view is impressive, especially at night. In the 1979 federal election campaign, a Rhinocerous candidate got mileage from a promise to build a gigantic mirror on the Levis side so Quebecers could admire themselves without having to cross the river.

Longer tours are offered on the Louis Jolliet, a 900-ton vessel that offers two different itineraries daily from Chouinard pier near the ferry dock.

In a two-hour cruise leaving at 2 p.m., the boat makes its way downriver to the tip of Ile d'Orleans. Passengers can take in quiet farming villages, Montmorency Falls and the shipbuilding yards at Lauzon.

Fare is $6 for adults and half price for children under 12.

In the evening, the Louis Jolliet steams upriver toward the Quebec Bridge and the mouth of the Chaudiere River, offering a view of the Citadel, Anse au Foulon (Wolfe's Cove) and the Plains of Abraham.

Departure is at 8 p.m. and the fare is $7 for the three-hour trip, half price for children. On Saturday evenings a dance band is aboard and the fare is a dollar more.

A variety of excursions is also available from Montmagny, a town on the south shore about 50 kilometres downriver from Quebec City.

The government ferry La Marjolaine shuttles between Montmagny and Ile aux Grues (crane island) three kilometres offshore. The twice-daily round trip costs $2 and allows time for a drive around the island by car or on the island's public transport — a van with two open-air benches.

Montmagny is also home port for the Jos Lachance II, a motor yacht run by the Lachance family of seafarers.

The Lachances offer a choice of daytime or moonlight excursions ranging from a few hours to three days. Their craft will take 30 people on short trips and 10 if passengers are to sleep and eat on board.

A few hours can take you to a picnic on one of the many smaller islands that dot the river. A one-day voyage may involve a circumnavigation of Ile d'Orleans or a run downriver to Ile aux Coudres, a handicraft centre just off the spectacular shoreline of Charlevois County where the Laurentian mountains tumble into "the sea."

Two- and three-day voyages can go as far as Murray Bay or the Saguenay, with stops on the way.

Arrangements should be made with the Lachance family in Montmagny.

Travellers along the shore below Quebec City can build a river voyage into their trip by taking a ferry crossing to the other shore. Because of the width of the estuary, some of these crossings are quite long.

The first such ferry runs between St. Simeon, not far from Ile aux Coudres, and Riviere du Loup. Both towns are about 175 kilometres northeast of Quebec City.

There are four of the 75-minute crossings daily, at $9.50 per automobile.

Abscam 4 found guilty

NEW YORK (AP) — Representative Michael Myers and three co-defendants were convicted today of sharing a $50,000 influence-peddling bribe in return for the Philadelphia congressman's promise to help a fictitious sheik on immigration matters.

"The videotapes and the cameras told the whole story," said juror Sam Baz, a Brooklyn machinist. "That was it. It wasn't acting."

The defendants, who had admitted taking the money while denying any wrongdoing, had said they were only "play acting" during videotaped meetings with an undercover FBI agent posing as a representative of the bogus sheik.

The jury of nine women and three men handed down the verdict to U.S. District Judge George Pratt in the Brooklyn courtroom just minutes after midnight Friday night. They deliberated 10¼ hours.

The defendants face 15 years in prison on the bribery conviction, the most serious charge.

5.1 quake off California

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A moderate earthquake hit the Gulf of California Friday night.

The tremor occurred was centred about 440 kilometres southeast of San Diego, Calif.

The Survey's National Earthquake Information Service in Golden said the quake, which registered 5.1 on the Richter scale, was in the same general area as a July 8, 1975, 6.5 tremor.

Iran firing squads busy

Times News Services

Iranian authorities, ignoring pleas from Amnesty International, executed 25 people by firing squads Friday, including 11 people convicted of trying to overthrow Ayatollah Khomeini, Tehran Radio reported.

Tehran Radio said 11 people convicted in the July coup attempt were executed at 11 p.m. Tehran time. Their deaths brought to almost 90 the number of people to be put before firing squads in the overthrow plot.

Most of the 11 were identified as military men but one was a woman.

Pars news agency said those executed included three retired army men. One, a retired major-general, was charged with having a part in killings on "Black Friday" — Sept. 8, 1978.

On that date, many Iranians were killed after several thousand people took to the streets of Tehran to protest the shah's imposition of martial law in an attempt to squelch then-mounting revolutionary fervor against his regime.

It was also reported that five other people were executed for murder, torture and embezzlement and nine others were put to death in Mashad on drug charges.

The group of five was put to death today at Qasr prison in Tehran "on charges of manslaughter, participation in the massacre of Moslem people of Tehran, direct connections with SAVAK and encouraging prostitution," Pars said. SAVAK was Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's secret police organization.

The rash of executions came hours after Amnesty International appealed for an end to Iran's swift and bloody justice. The London-based human rights group said more than 1,000 people have been executed in Iran since the February, 1979, revolution brought Khomeini to power.

Iranian officials announced in July they had uncovered a coup plot, which they said was backed by the United States, Israel and Iraq.

Sleep on dear good mother, it has been long years

Since you left our hearts filled with sadness and tears

Yours was a heart that was blithesome
and gay

Scattering sunshine
all along the way

You know how we love you and, yes,
love you yet

Though God took
we cannot forget.

God in his wisdom

The boon
his love had given

And though the body
slumbers here

The soul is safe in heaven.

Nanaimo youth sees dad drown

While his teenage son watched in horror, a 57-year-old Nanaimo man drowned Friday while swimming at Westwood Lake near Nanaimo.

RCMP said Gordon Jennings was swimming about 9 metres from shore when he disappeared.

His son, who was on the shore at the time, apparently tried to reach him but couldn't.

Police were alerted at 3:15 p.m. and a diver located the body in about 5 m of water a little over an hour later.

Pool saves torched boy

MONTREAL (CP) — A six-year-old boy was rushed to hospital with severe burns Friday night after he was doused with gasoline and set on fire, police say.

The boy, who was not identified, ran to a nearby apartment building and jumped into the swimming pool — otherwise, police say, he would have burned to death.

Police officers are searching today for a 15- or 16-year-old boy in connection with the attack, which took place in suburban Pierrefonds.

ANOTHER TRIUMPH FOR SEIRAWAN

By John Peters

Nineteen-year-old International Master Yasser Seirawan of Seattle won the 1979 United States Junior Championship held June 17-26 in Los Angeles. His 5-2 score outdistanced 17-year-old Perry Youngworth of Riverside, California, 19-year-old Sergey Kudrin of Connecticut, and 15-year-old Joel Benjamin of New York, who tied for second place with 4 points each. Next were 17-year-old Jay Whitehead of San Francisco and 19-year-old Ken Regan of Princeton, N.J., with 3½ points, 16-year-old Michael Wilder, also of Princeton, with 2½, and 19-year-old Vincent McCambridge of La Habra, California, with 1½.

Seirawan's victory was difficult, though not unexpected. Highest rated in a high-rated field, he suffered two early losses to Benjamin and McCambridge, and had to win the rest of his games to take first prize. He overtook the early leader, Kudrin, who won his first three games but lost his next three, and Youngworth, who had 4-1 but lost his last two. His success entitled him to represent the United States in the 1979 World Junior Championship in Skien, Norway.

World Literacy Day

Monday, Sept. 8, will be the 15th annual World Literacy Day.

Many Canadians think that illiteracy is a problem confined to Third World countries, but adult educators in B.C. know the problem exists here too.

Members of the Adult Basic Education Association of B.C. say the useful information in most magazines and newspapers can only be understood by people who read at least as well as high school graduates.

They say:

— More people drop out of the public school system than graduate from it.

— More adults lack a Grade 11 or 12 education than there are children in the public school system.

— One in six British Columbians lacks a Grade 10 education; one in three lacks Grade 12.

— Opportunities for a person to complete a basic education, once he or she leaves public school, are far from adequate. More people need such an opportunity than there are spaces in adult basic education programs.

Now sponsored by UNESCO, World Literacy Day was founded by a Congress of Ministers of Education in Iran in 1965. Two prizes of $5,000 have been awarded each year since, to people who have led the battle against illiteracy.

Son's violent death tames Coconut Jim

Times News Services

PORT VILA, Vanuatu — Secessionist leader Jimmy Stevens has surrendered to Vanuatu government forces, ending a three-month old revolt on the island of Espiritu Santo, witnesses said today.

The colorful coconut plantation owner reportedly threw in the towel hours after his 24-year-old son Eddie was killed by a grenade thrown by Papua-New Guinea soldiers as they were preparing to attack Stevens' jungle headquarters in the village of Vanafo.

Unconfirmed reports said two other rebels were wounded in a clash with the troops sent to help the fledgling Vanuatu government scotch the rebellion.

Auri Eva, a journalist who accompanied the troops, said Stevens surrendered to the troops peacefully Friday night. Eva said there were no casualties among the Guinean troops or the Vanuatu police.

The joint forces recovered stolen vehicles, boxes of ammunition and guns from the rebel headquarters, north of Luganville, Esiritu Santo's capital, Eva said.

Stevens was taken into custody and escorted back to the capital of Port Vila where he was to meet Vanuatu government officials Sunday for negotiations.

Vanuatu, formerly the New Hebrides, is a group of about 80 islands 1,600 kilometres northeast of Australia, and was jointly ruled by Britain and France for 74 years until independence July 30.

Stevens and a group of about 200 mainly French-speaking plantation owners seized control of Espirtu Santo, the nation's largest and richest island, May 28. The rebels feared they would lose their land when Prime Minister Walter Lini, who had pledged to institute land reform, took control of the government.

Hercules finally collared?

BENBECULA, Scotland (UPI) — The "Herculean" labors of the bounty hunters of Benbecula may pay off after all!

Hercules, a 2½-metre, 250-kilogram grizzly bear, was feared drowned late last week after fleeing a film set on this Outer Hebridean island where he was making a commercial.

The grizzly — who earns more than $50,000 a year from doing stunts and commercials — swam out to sea and evaded a search party of banana-bearing beaters, tracker dogs and soldiers.

Now owner Andy Robins, who offered a reward for the bear's capture, says he has found Hercules' green collar near a new lair and fresh tracks on a nearby island.

"He's a very, very clever boy," Robins said Friday. "He chose a small fern-covered ledge right on the water's edge where he could see everything without being seen himself.

"I've left him a nice lump of fresh meat in his den to help him get his strength and confidence back."

Airliner incident ends

LIMA (AP) — A tense 23-hour standoff ended peacefully early today when a group of Cuban refugees who had seized a California-bound Braniff jetliner at the Lima airport surrendered to authorities and freed 15 hostages, the Peruvian government said.

An airline spokesman said the hostages were safe and would spend the night at a Lima hotel before flying to Los Angeles in the morning.

Braniff said there was one Canadian among the hostages. He was identified as Henry Young but his hometown was not available.

The Cubans, who stormed the DC-8 jet early Friday at Jorge Chavez Airport, had demanded resettlement in the United States and threatened to burn the plane if their demand was not met.

Sources said they surrendered after Peruvian government negotiators gave them a choice of giving up or being declared air pirates and running the risk of being barred from the United States.

Witnesses said three of the Cubans were wounded by policemen who opened fire as the refugees forced their way aboard the plane at about 1 a.m. local time.

Transportation Minister Fernando Chaves Belaunde told reporters no charges will be brought against the 168 men, women and children who stormed the plane, and they will be returned to a refugee camp east of Lima.

Jere Cox, Braniff's public relations chief in Dallas, said the surrender "followed negotiations between the Cubans and Peruvian officials in co-operation with the U.S. state department." He did not elaborate.

U.S. officials had said the Cubans would be arrested if they arrived in the United States.

Chaves Belaunde said President Fernando Belaunde rejected the Cubans' demand for another airplane after meeting with Interior Minister Jose Maria de la Jara, who had negotiated directly with the Cubans; U.S. Ambassador Harry Schlaudeman and Foreign Minister Javier Arias Stella.

More than a thousand Cubans were given refuge in Peru after they packed into the Peruvian Embassy in Havana, Cuba, last April seeking asylum from Fidel Castro's communist regime. They were placed in resettlement camps here, but many seek to join relatives who fled to the United States in the boatlift in May and June.

The refugees say their living conditions are intolerable in Peru and said Peruvian officials are indifferent to their complaints.

A Braniff passenger list said the hostages were seven Americans, two Peruvians, two Brazilians and one passenger each from France, Japan and Canada. The nationality of the 15th hostage was not known.

Wine buoys rower's spirits

The 34-year-old yachtsman from Auray, Brittany, left Cape Cod July 11 for a single-handed crossing of the big "pond."

Amateur radio operators here last week heard d'Aboville complain to a French naval station his wine, stored in plastic containers, had turned sour. So the crew of a Norwegian freighter this week lowered him five gallons of wine.

Jerusalem oil-jacked?

KUWAIT (UPI) — Saudi Arabia has threatened to slash its oil production by up to 1 million barrels a day unless the United States pressures Israel into rescinding its new law formally annexing Jerusalem, a Kuwaiti newspaper said today.

The newspaper al-Anbaa said a "toughly worded warning" was delivered to the State Department by the Saudi ambassador to the U.S. Saudi Arabia, the world's leading oil exporter, presently produces 9.5 million barrels daily and is the United States' major supplier of foreign oil.

Reports have circulated in oil circles in recent months that Saudi officials have intended to trim production by up to 1 million barrels daily, probably toward the end of the year.

UFO facilities focus for fling

ASHFORD, Wash. (UPI) — The New Age Foundation has its flying saucer landing zone all spruced up and ready this weekend for the 4th annual Mystic Mountain Homecoming.

The three-day gathering on the southwest slopes of Mount Rainier will climax Monday with a visit to an open field in nearby Cedar Park, where the group hopes a triangular-shaped rockpile will lure a spaceship from another planet.

Wayne Aho, chief spokesman for the foundation, says this year's gathering is especially important because of the earthquakes, volcanic eruptions and world-wide upheaval.

"We are," says Aho, "in a major cycle of earth change that will be concluded about 2025 A.D."

Mount Rainier was once "the scene of a great, undiscovered civilization."

The foundation is devising a program of self-help until the world enjoys a noiseless, pollution-free environment.

Opera slaying arrest made

Times News Services

NEW YORK — A stage-hand at the Metropolitan Opera House was charged today in the slaying of Helen Hagnes Mintiks, a British Columbia-born violinist whose bizarre murder at the Met sparked fears of a real-life "phantom of the opera."

The suspect, Craig Steven Crimmins, 21, a high school dropout described by detectives as a "street kid," has held various jobs at the Met for the last four years. He was on a four-week vacation, due back at the Met Sept. 9, when arrested.

The suspect's father and stepfather are long-term Met employees and they co-operated in the investigation, detectives said.

Chief of Detectives James Sullivan told a news conference Crimmins was identified as a suspect about two weeks ago from among at least 1,000 people interviewed since the Juilliard-trained violinist was slain July 23.

Miss Hagnes — as she was known professionally — was a member of a freelance orchestra assembled for the tour of the Berlin Ballet.

After playing the final C in the Don Quixote pas de deux, she placed her violin on her seat and left the pit for a brief talk with Valery Panov, a Russian defector and premier dancer with the troupe, intending to return for the program's final work.

It was the last note she ever played.

Her nude, bound-and gagged body was discovered the next morning in an air-shaft in the huge, cavernous theatre. She had been hurled from a roof while still alive.

The medical examiner's report said there was evidence of sexual assault but not of rape. Police believe there was a sexual motive for the slaying.

Sullivan refused to discuss any evidence in the case. He did say Crimmins' appearance matched a police sketch circulated in the Met but not released to the public.

The suspect was described as being of medium build, with brown hair and blue eyes. He had recently had a tatoo bearing an eagle and an American flag affixed to his right arm with the date, Aug. 21, 1980.

"We do not know that he knew her," he said, adding he suspected the victim and Crimmins had had a chance encounter.

The suspect lived with his father, Edward, an electrician at the Met for more than 20 years, and his 19-year-old sister. His stepfather also has been employed by the Met for more than a decade, police said.

A native of Aldergrove, Miss Hagnes played with the CBC orchestra in 1971 before she won a scholarship to Western Washington State College and acceptance by the Julliard School of Music in New York.

She also represented Canada in the Jeunesses Musicales world orchestra in Montreal and Copenhagen.

Polish workers win

Warsaw yields on union issue

Times News Services

GDANSK — Poland's worst labor crisis in a decade appeared to be near an end today, after the Polish Communist party approved a settlement with striking workers that provides "independent, self-governing trade unions" and other political and economic reforms.

The party's central committee in Warsaw approved the agreements that strike leaders in Gdansk and the major port of Szczecin said would send workers back to their posts by Monday.

The Polish news agency PAP said the central committee met under the chairmanship of party leader Edward Gierek to review agreements worked out by Senior Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski with a strike committee in Gdansk and by Deputy Premier Kazimiersz Barcikowski with the strike committee in Szczecin.

Initial reports indicated not all of the Gdansk workers' 21 demands had been met but that the agreement guarantees the right to strike, provides immunity from prosecution for strike leaders, the release of political prisoners and relaxation of censorship laws except when military, economic or state secrets are involved.

A draft of the agreement said "the government will be obliged to prepare and present a complete program implementing all these demands, taking into consideration the economic possibilities of the country by Sept. 30."

The statement suggested the workers will return to work as a show of good faith and that the agreement represents a compromise recognizing Poland's severe economic problems.

As strike leader Andrzej Gwiazda read the communique announcing the tentative accord, hundreds of cheering workers gathered in the Lenin Shipyards threw their old union cards into the air.

After meeting with jubilant workers at the shipyards, flashpoint for the strike which began Aug. 14 and spread across the country, First Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski returned to Warsaw to submit the accord to the central committee.

Under terms of the settlement, both sides agreed that the independent trade union would be built on "Socialist principles."

Writ aims new blow at centre

Victoria's controversial convention centre issue is once again back in the courts.

A group called the Victoria Waterfront Enhancement Society filed a writ in Supreme Court Friday asking the court to quash a bylaw passed by city council in late July approving a development permit for the project on Wharf Street below Bastion Square.

The writ was served five minutes before city hall closed for the weekend, and Mayor Bill Tindall postponed comment until he had discussed the matter with city manager Jim Bramley.

Charles Ball, spokesman for the society said today the suit alleges three violations of the Municipal Act:

— That city hall failed to give proper notice to all residents and owners of property in the immediate area affected by the zoning change;

— That a written report on a public hearing on the centre read out in council prior to the vote on the development permit was incomplete, and

— That new material of relevance to the substance of the motion was introduced just prior to the vote, thereby depriving council members of adequate time to consider the material.

Mr. Justice W.J. Wallace's June 25 quashing of a rezoning bylaw that would have allowed the centre to be built on the waterfront site is under appeal.

No paper Monday

There will be no paper Monday, Labor Day. Victoria Times subscribers will receive the first afternoon edition of the new Times-Colonist newspaper on Tuesday.

LOVING THEIR LICKS are seven-year-old cousins Tammy Norris and Robbie Kirkwood, caught enjoying a cone in Welland, Ont. Meanwhile, this week's cooler temperatures in Victoria also cooled ice cream sales, and the unsettled weather is expected to continue for at least the next few days.

17 rock concert fans die in tear gas panic

MASERU, Lesotho (UPI) — At least 17 teenagers, panicked by a barrage of police tear gas, were trampled and smothered to death in the southern African kingdom of Lesotho as they tried to force their way into a sold-out rock concert, police said today. Another 30 were injured in the melee.

"It was a horrifying experience," the show's promoter, Joseph Tsatsanyane, said. "Blood was flowing as youngsters tried to climb over each other in an attempt to escape the tear gas."

Hospital director Dr. N.C. Moji said 16 bodies were recovered at the hall after the stampede Friday night and another teenager died today. He said some of the injured were in serious condition.

The fans, between 12 and 18 years old, became angry when they were told the concert by local South African star Steven Kekane was sold out.

A crowd of 1,000 fans gathered outside the small 4,000 seat AMI concert hall in the Lesotho capital, and about midway through the show surged towards the locked doors.

Police fired tear gas canisters into the crowd, touching off a panicky stampede in all directions.

Witnesses said police may have started firing tear gas when the windows of the concert hall were smashed by rocks. Several shots rang out but police said they may have come from gun-toting fans and not police.

Radio Lesotho broadcast an urgent message for all doctors in the area to come to the Queen Elizabeth hospital to help treat the injured.

Large lines formed outside the government mortuary as relatives of the dead fans gathered to identify the bodies.

"It was just how I imagined the Who concert to be," one fan said.

On Dec. 3, 1979, 11 young people died in Cincinnati, Ohio, when fans rushed the doors of the Riverfront Coliseum to get to their seat for a performance by the British rock band The Who.

Labor beefs by mail

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C Federation of Labor is tired of being ignored by the provincial government and won't go to Victoria to present its annual brief to cabinet, federation president Jim Kinnaird said Friday.

Kinnaird said in a news release the best reception the labor organization has received from the cabinet to date has been rude indifference. He said this year's brief will be mailed to Victoria.

"Last year we were told privately by the premier following the presentation of the brief, that contrary to public statements he made, he had no intention of co-operating or communicating with the B.C. Federation of Labor," Kinnaird said.

Plight of crime 'habituals' probed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A group of B.C. criminology and law students is trying to find out why 17 of Canada's longest-serving prisoners are still behind bars.

The students will interview individuals who have been serving time for up to 24 years as habitual offenders — a designation struck from the Criminal Code in 1977 but under which they still are imprisoned.

The habituals — many of whom are eligible for old age pensions — received what amounts to life sentences after being convicted of at least three indictable offences.

Don Sorochan, one of the lawyers co-ordinating the project, says more than half of all the criminals designated habitual offenders in Canada were sentenced in Vancouver during an anti-crime campaign in the 1960s.

Sorochan, appointed Tuesday as a regional member of the National Parole Board, said the typical habitual offender was not a violent public menace, but a petty lawbreaker who couldn't stay away from burglaries, street-level drug activities or similar offences.

"But once they got onto the habitual status, it became a never-ending treadmill, where they got let out on parole, only to be brought back in for what may or may not have been a criminal offence," he said.

"For instance, public drunkenness. An ordinary individual who is picked up is just as likely to be put in the drunk tank overnight to sleep it off before being released, whereas a habitual might have his parole revoked and find himself back in the penitentiary for a year at least.

"It seems quite unfair that some of these old-time habituals, who, relative to other prisoners, have no serious offences, end up staying so long in prison."

Habituals now serving time in B.C. average 56 years old and have been behind bars for an average of 16½ years. About 30 other habituals are free on parole or day pass.

Sorochan said he felt the problem was partly political, especially since the habituals could have been released when the habitual offender law was scrapped.

"In a sense, there was nothing to be politically gained (by the authorities) by releasing these people.

"What if they'd gone on the street and committed a high profile crime? Then there would have been a great uproar — 'We had them behind bars, who let them out?' "

He said he hoped the study would lead in the coming year to ending the habitual status of at least some of the prisoners or to a modified parole procedure so they wouldn't be sent back to jail unnecessarily.

Fishermen like these in Sansum Narrows may some day sock it to salmon thanks to the persistent efforts of fisherman-author-moviemaker Charlie White, at right

Chinook, coho star in underwater epic

Charlie White is the Peeping Tom of the salmon fishing world.

He has seen Chester Chinook and Connie Coho doing their thing to a naked herring and caught the action on film.

Voyeurs up and down the coast have lined up to view it.

White is a fisherman, author, publisher and engineer-cum-biologist from Sidney. He has been showing his slick new film which is highlighted by intimate shots of salmon taken by his underwater camera.

The film is the focal point of White's many salmon fishing seminars in West Coast communities.

White has been shooting underwater film for seven years and each season attempts to delve deeper into what makes a salmon strike a lure. Or for that matter, what makes them turn away, as most salmon do.

So far he has some indications, but no definite answers and his only advice is to make sure hooks are sharp because many fish make only half-hearted swipes at the bait.

The camera, which is attached to a downrigger and placed behind the bait, can now be set to photograph two lures at the same time.

"The trouble we have had," he said, "is that if we placed the lures too far apart, one of them was out of camera range.

"If we placed them closer together, they tangled. Now we appear to have that problem solved."

The improvement allowed White to carry out different experiments this summer as he worked the waters off Vancouver Island in his nine-metre boat. He planned to place an artificial lure on one line and a natural bait on the other. He also hoped to compare large herring with small ones; slow-rolling herring with fast-rolling and scented lures with unscented ones.

Obtaining presentable film is painstaking. It is rare when the water is clear enough, the surface calm enough and the fish shallow enough. The camera can't function at lower than 21 metres.

"It has become incredibly expensive to make a film," White says. He hopes to recover part of the cost of his expeditions from the seminars.

White was born in Pennsylvania and received a civil engineering degree at the University of Oregon in Eugene. He subsequently had a change of heart on both matters.

"I've always said I was a Canadian born on the wrong side of the border," he said. "I loved the attitude and lifestyle of the people up here and, let's face it, I loved the fishing."

He came to Sidney 25 years ago after foresaking his engineering degree for a shot as a working biologist for the Oregon Fish Commission.

But his engineering education and his love of fishing, came together when he built the Undersea Gardens in Victoria in 1963, which stripped away some of the mystique of life below the surface of the sea.

With the profits from that, he launched Saltaire Publishing Co., which has turned out a successful series of "How To" paperbacks, seven of them written by White. They have sold 400,000 copies, with How To Catch Salmon leading the list with 100,000 in sales.

"All my projects initially been motivated by my curiosity," said White. "You've heard fishermen sitting around discussing how fish grab the bait.

"One guy would say the salmon slaps the herring with its tail to knock it out and then takes it. Ask him how he knows and he says his dad told him. I thought there must be some way to get down there and have a look."

The sight of a six-kilogram coho, mouth agape, bearing down upon a piece of herring strip is enough to interest any fisherman.

By PAT DUFOUR

The Soviet Union's navy — subject of a massive buildup over the past 10 years — is in a position to interfere with or interdict all the world's vital shipping lanes, Rear-Admiral Michael Martin has warned.

Martin, who stepped down Thursday as commander maritime forces Pacific, said in an interview the Soviet Union's strong maritime presence allows it to control and change the destinies of developing countries.

"That's the power of maritime forces in peace time. You can project your presence and strength very easily," he said.

"It's the great flexibilty of maritime forces. You can remain in one place without being seen for long periods of time."

At the crucial moment, Martin says, military pressure can then be applied to either support governments or topple them, help revolutions and control the flow of vital arms and goods.

"You don't have to wage open war to win a position of strength," Martin says.

He said one of the best examples of this is Africa — particularly West Africa — where the Soviet presence is extremely strong.

The Soviet Union's marine forces in the Pacific are building steadily, both in surface ships and submarines, just as their navies are being beefed up in the Baltic, North and Black Seas.

While sovereignty of the Canadian Arctic must be guarded, Martin says this is already being done effectively by the Canadian Coast Guard.

"There is so little money in the defence budget that it is better to concentrate naval strength on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts where the main threat lies," he said.

Canada spends only two per cent of the gross national product on defence, the only North Atlantic Treaty Organization country spending less being Luxembourg.

Is this excusable?

Martin says it may be because the amount is decided by representatives of the people in a democratic vote.

"But that doesn't mean that it is right," Martin adds.

"Two per cent is very low for a country as rich as Canada and with the standing our country has in the western world."

Before the Royal Canadian Navy was formed, Canada relied on the Royal Navy for protection, paying $3 million a year for the service.

In latter years, the tendency has been to rely heavily on the U.S.

Martin says the U.S. has made it clear to its European allies that it expects them to carry more of the weight.

Two hurt in car smash

Two persons are in hospital, one in serious condition, after a car smashed into a rock bluff early today.

Police said the accident occurred at the north end of Shelbourne near the entrance to Churchill Drive.

The driver of the car, identified as Donald Corey McMillan, 24, of 3130 Kingsley, is listed in fairly good condition in Royal Jubilee with head and leg injuries.

His passenger, an 18-year-old girl, is in serious condition in the same hospital.

A hospital spokesman said she is being treated for neck, leg, rib and head injuries.

Her name has not been released pending notification of next of kin.

Police said the accident occurred about 2.50 a.m. An investigation is continuing.

It's drink for rich

Beer is plentiful in Victoria once again — but awfully expensive.

Trucks brought loads of Schlitz beer to liquor stores and hotels Friday after picket lines were withdrawn at court order from the main distribution point on the Lower Mainland.

But no Olympia beer is coming to Victoria.

This means the cheapest beer available in stores will be selling at $11.51 a dozen.

In hotels Schlitz sells at about $1.75 a bottle.

By contrast, Oly sells at $7.02 a dozen and $1.35 to $1.50 a bottle.

The expensive brew had been selling slowly in LDB stores as customers waited for cheaper beer to arrive.

"Schlitz? Boy, have we got Schlitz!" a spokesman at one liquor store said.

"And we're expecting another load of it but there's no Olympia coming to Victoria."

During the summer, he said, beer shipments to the capital region consisted of 80 per cent Olympia and 20 per cent Schlitz. Most other regions had to be content with 50-50.

"We've gone through our quota of Oly. I don't think there will be any more in Victoria for a full week. Plenty of Schlitz, though."

However, Vancouver got shipments of Oly Friday afternoon and customers lined up for it.

In Victoria, several local hotels are revising their earlier decisions to close their taverns by Sept. 1.

As along as some beer is available, regardless of how expensive it is, they will carry on.

In the labor dispute, pickets for four days had refused to obey a cease-and-desist order from the B.C. Labor Relations Board. That order was backed by another Thursday from the B.C. Supreme Court.

The pickets were lifted after John Langley, chief spokesman for the brewery workers, met with B.C. dederation of Labor president Jim Kinnaird who, Langley said, strongly suggested the workers stop illegal picketing.

Meanwhile, Bob Wallace, branch general manager, said Friday the branch is not going ahead immediately with contempt proceedings against the brewery workers.

However, the board will go to the LRB to seek damages from the union for costs incurred during the illegal picketing, he said.

B.C. has been short of beer since July 25 when the three largest breweries — Molson's, Labatt's and Carling O'Keefe — locked out their 900 employees over a contract dispute.

LDB oficial Joyce Courtney said a contempt action against the union was being reconsidered now that the pickets had been withdrawn.

But she said the branch is proceeding with a court action seeking damages from the union for the costs lost during the picketing.

Sewage worries divers

Scuba divers are becoming concerned about the health hazard posed by sea sewage off southern Vancouver Island, Victoria Medical Association president Paul Broome said today.

"They are worried about the viruses in the water. Some won't dive anywhere south of Sidney."

Broome said Victoria doctors believe the health hazard is growing, for those on land as well as in the sea.

"Unfortunately we can not document it. We do not have any way of measuring viruses in the water. Nor can we prove that related illnesses are on the increase, although we suspect they are."

Nurses have told the Times that salmonella and hepatitis, two diseases related to sanitation, have increased in Victoria city.

But figures from the Capital Region District do not demonstrate an area-wide increase.

Broome said doctors have felt frustrated by the lack of evidence to support their fears the danger to health is increasing.

"All we can show is that the coliform count is up, especially at Cordova Bay, and we know the number of viruses must be increasing. I guess we will need some kind of epidemic to bring the point home."

He said swimmers and scuba divers should be warned about the probable increase of viruses.

Many divers are already concerned and are driving to locations outside the Greater Victoria area before entering the water.

Broome said the VMA is proposing a three-step course of action:

—Stop using short outfalls. In particular, the region should scrap construction of the new McMicking Point short outfall and have Oak Bay sewage diverted to Clover Point.

—Use long outfall systems, as a short-term solution.

—Begin plans for a treatment plant, possibly at Work Point Barracks.

Broome said short outfalls create serious problems for Greater Victoria and should no longer be tolerated by the community.

Long outfalls are better since the sewage is carried out by tidal currents.

"Unfortunately the tide also comes in. We must recognize that long outfalls are not a long-term solution."

Constructing a treatment plant would be very expensive, Broome admitted, adding he has heard estimates as high as $60 million.

Broome said he is convinced the expenditure is well worth the investment because pollution will soon affect the total economy of the region as well as being a potential health hazard.

Fishing, boating, swimming and tourism could all be adversely affected.

Because of the long lead time required to complete a treatment plant, Broome urged the CRD to begin planning for it now.

Drinking drivers hit Batvan roadblocks

For the second night in a row the Greater Victoria police Batvan was on the prowl in the western communities.

This time Colwood RCMP stopped about 400 vehicles at roadblocks set up on Admirals near Plumper Bay between 8.30 p.m. and 3.30 a.m.

Officers nabbed four motorists for impaired driving and charged another with refusing to provide a breath sample.

In addition one driver was given a 24-hour roadside suspension, one was charged with driving while his licence was under suspension, 17 were handed traffic violation tickets, 21 others got traffic notices, and two were caught driving without insurance, a minimum $250 fine.

And a passenger in one of the cars wound up charged with obstruction.

The unit is back on the road again tonight.
